Yanks Sink U-Boat In Death Struggle At Ten-Foot Range

Official U. S. Navy Photo

Ready to go over the side—crewmen of a German submarine, wearing life preservers, watch attacking American planes as they prepare to go over the side. They gave up without firing a shot. The fish painted on the conning tower seems to be smiling on the scene

By John G. Norris

SAVAGELY attacking with the tactics as well as the spirit of John Paul Jones, the American destroyer Borie sank a Nazi U-boat in the North Atlantic recently in one of the most amazing sea fights of all history.

Firing shotguns and pistols, and even throwing empty shell cases and knives, the Yankee sailors battled the crew of the submarine at a 10-foot range, after the Borie rammed and pinned down its foe like a terrier grappling a rat.

Then, fatally wounded in the hour-long clash, the gallant old destroyer fought another battle—this one with King Neptune. She lost to this potent foe, but only after carrying most of her crew to safety.

Only a matter of hours before, the Borie destroyed another German sub—knocking it out with depth charges. In telling of the action yesterday, the Navy announced that the vessel and other ships of her task force had won a Presidential Unit Citation for having sunk "more submarines than any team in naval history."

The force cited was made up of the aircraft carrier Card, the destroyers Borie, Barry and Goff, and composite squadrons 1 and 9, the aviation units on the Card. This antisubmarine team was officially credited with being "largely responsible for the complete withdrawal of hostile U-boats" from the United States-North Africa convoy route.

THE commander of the force, Capt. Arnold J. Isbell of 1841 Kilbourne pl. nw., and the skipper of the Borie, 30-year-old Lieut. Charles H. Hutchins of Terre Haute, Ind., told the story of their North Atlantic victories yesterday. Both officers, with others of the "world champion team," were brought here yesterday to give a first-hand account of the actions.

Surrounded by newsmen and ranking naval officers and popping flashbulbs, Hutchins described the Borie's battle. The dramatic values of his story largely overshadowed those telling of the heroic work of the airmen and other Navy men of the task force.

The U-boat, said by Hutchins to be "the biggest one they'd ever seen," was sighted two hours after another Nazi sub had been depth-charged to death by the Borie.

"We tried to ram," he declared, "but it submerged and we dropped all the depth charges on the racks. We must have scored because the U-boat came to the surface. Again we sped forward to ram, firing as we went. Our fire wiped the sub's deck clear of Germans and swept away their forward gun.

"Our bow struck the sub and rode over it. I stopped the engines and we held it fast. Then we let go with everything we had—4-inch guns, 20-mm. and machine guns, at ranges from 10 to 40 feet.

"SOME men fired shotguns. The executive officer grabbed a tommy gun and started firing from the bridge. Others used pistols and one boy even took a signal pistol and fired it at the sub. The range was so short that one gun couldn't be brought to bear. So the gun captain started throwing empty shell cases and he knocked one man off the deck of the sub.

"Another fellow threw his knife. He said later he'd never been able to stick a knife in the floor before, but this time he stuck it in the stomach of a German and he went overboard.

"One of our machine guns couldn't be depressed enough to bear on the sub because of the armored shield. The gunner shot right through the screen at the enemy."

After about 10 minutes of this inferno, the submarine got clear and attempted to flee. It went into a "tight turn" in the pitch black darkness, and for a time the Borie could not close in.

"Then he turned the tables and tried to ram us," Hutchins continued, "but we stopped him 6 feet short by dropping depth charges, set to

WLB Chief Asserts Coal Controversy Impaired Board's Ability to Function

By Ben W. Gilbert

Although admitting that the War Labor Board's ability to handle wartime strikes was impaired by the coal wage controversy, WLB Chairman William H. Davis asserted yesterday:

"I have not begun to surrender and do not intend to surrender any part of the wage stabilization program."

He made it plain that the WLB has no present intention of scrapping the "Little Steel" wage yardstick, but in that connection pointed out that the final decision on such a question would have to be made by President Roosevelt.

To meet organized labor's complaint that the wage yardstick was unjust as now applied, the President appointed Davis chairman of a five-man committee of WLB members to investigate the cost of living.

Would Lower Prices

Davis said that if the committee finds that inequalities exist it would recommend that prices be brought down, not that wages be raised.

An attempt to readjust price-wage relationships by raising wages would "start the spiral again and kid the man you are giving the wages to," Davis said.

He indicated that if the process of bringing prices down turned out to be expensive, "then we might really have to do some taxing."

"The wage stabilization policy established by the act of Congress on October 2, 1942, and by the executive orders issued thereunder has been firmly maintained, and I believe that it will continue to be firmly maintained," Davis said.

"The controversy in the coal fields has greatly injured the policy of the War Labor Board in dealing with strikes, and I believe it has greatly damaged the American labor movement, but it has not impaired the wage-stabilization policy, as all the more thoughtful observers are beginning to point out, and as will become increasingly clear as time goes on."

Confidence in Bowles

(This was believed to be a reference to the fact that Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes reached a bargain with the United Mine Workers while a strike was in progress.)

Davis said that OPA Administrator Chester Bowles "honestly believes" he can bring prices down

Snow Flurries For Armistice Day Predicted Here

Armistice Day will be cold and cloudy, the Weather Bureau predicted last night.

The forecaster added, however, that a "cold front" would reach the city sometime in the morning, accompanied by snow flurries of short duration. A maximum temperature of 48 degrees and a minimum of 34 was forecast. Temperatures slightly below freezing were seen for nearby Maryland and Virginia.

Last Armistice Day the highest registered was 46 degrees and low, 36.

Yesterday the mercury rose to 48 degrees from a low of 36.

Mother Feels Son Nearer At Shrine

A woman stood alone in front of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, her head bowed in prayer for her son slain in the present war.

To Corpl. William Byrne of the Ceremonianl Detachment, who has guarded the Tomb during 19 months of war, she appeared only as one of thousands of visitors until she turned to speak

"I know this is for the boys who died unknown in the first World War," she said. "But coming here makes me feel closer to my boy who was just lost in a bomber somewhere over Europe. My husband, a major in the Air Forces, is in Italy now. I miss them both very much, but Sonny seems right here beside me because the spirit of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier is with us in this war."

Corporal Byrne said yesterday that the feeling of this mother is manifested daily as women weep and pray at the hallowed shrine.

Corporal Byrne graphically told how many visitors pray as they remember a son, husband or sweetheart who gave not only life but also identity for the American flag.

House Vote Extends Term Of Quezon

Philippine President Will Retain Office 'Til Islands Are Freed

By Robert C. Albright

The House yesterday voted, 181 to 107, to extend the terms of Philippine President Manuel L. Quezon and Vice President Sergio Osmena until the Japs are driven from their islands and their people hold another free election.

Passage of the joint resolution, previously approved by the Senate, came over spirited opposition of a Republican minority which insisted that terms of the Philippine constitutition be observed, even while the government is in exile.

Under the islands' constitution, Quezon would have been obliged to step down after the expiration of his term next Monday and Vice President Osmena would have succeeded him as President. The resolution, now on its way to the White House for signature, retains both men in their present posts for the war's duration. Both Quezon and Osmena supported the resolution, which was urgently backed by United States military and naval leaders.

Republicans Battle in Vain

Contending United States continuation of the Quezon government would "tear up the Philippine constitution" when the war is being fought to preserve democratic processes, a Republican-led coalition battled for four hours to defeat the move.

A motion to recommit the bill was offered by Representative Judd (Republican) of Minnesota, former medical missionary in the Orient. Judd urged the House to pause before suspending the Philippine constitution "at a time when constitutional governments are suspended all over the world." Representative Hoffman (Republican) of Michigan said it would supply an argument for electing Roosevelt to a fourth term.

The recommit motion was rejected 169 to 109 after Speaker Sam Rayburn followed Majority Leader McCormack and Insular Affairs

List of Gullibles Grows Fast As Police Hunt Dark Swindler

By Adele Bernstein

Police last night broadcast a lookout for the "dark-haired, hazel-eyed man with a limp" who disappeared from his elegant suite at the Hotel Statler Sunday, leaving a large unpaid bill and the entertainment world here in a daze.

Full description of the "swindler" who sold himself to night club operators, the cast of Olsen and Johnson's "Sons o' Fun," the Statler's management and other "contacts" as advance agent for three Hollywood stars who were arriving in Washington to make a picture called "Capital Capers," identifies him as Robert Ross, alias Robert Walsh, alias Foster Smith (the name he used in his widespread operations).

Police action followed the filing at headquarters of a formal complaint by the Statler Hotel, one of the imposter's principal victims.

He is 42 years of age, according to police records, 5 feet 10 inches in height, weighs 160 pounds and has a deformed left leg. He also "wears glasses and is very nervous." Authorities in Chicago and Los Angeles want him on charges of passing bad checks, police here said last night.

Meanwhile the list of "gullibles" who spent most of last weekend traveling to Washington, consulting and entertaining the plausible "Mr. Smith," or just waiting for the three stars' arrival here to begin a picture, grew to include a top New York representative for the Shubert brothers, a Warner Brothers' official in Washington, the manager and orchestra leader of

Ordered to Hold At All Costs, Enemy Hurls Counterattacks

By Edward Kennedy

Algiers, Nov. 10 (AP).—Under orders to hold their present Italian line at all costs "for at least eight weeks," German forces are launching savage counterattacks against American infantry and massed artillery in the mountainous Venafro area, the Allied command announced today.

The reinforced Nazis hurled nine furious but unavailing charges against the frostbitten Americans within 24 hours in a desperate effort to check the Allied advance on their new Garigliano River-Sangro River positions. Each time the Germans were thrown back with heavy casualties by terrific artillery barrages that ripped up the mountainsides.

Snow already had begun to fall in the Apennines, and conditions were the worst under which the Allies had fought since they invaded Italy.

Line Ordered Held

Documents taken from captured Germans confirmed that the enemy has picked his present front across Italy, some 70 to 80 miles from Rome, as a "winter line" and has ordered it held at all costs for "at least eight weeks."

The eleven Nazi divisions entrusted with the task were putting up stiff resistance everywhere. Their infantry was supported by heavy artillery concentrations on dominating heights and by squadrons of tanks held in reserve for sorties at threatened points. Every niche in the mountainsides concealed a machine-gun to sweep the approaches.

Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's Eighth Army further consolidated its positions on high ground overlooking the Sangro River near where it empties into the Adriatic and occupied the towns of Castiglione, Carovilli and Forli to put the main lateral road inland from Vasto completely under Allied control.

Daniel De Luce, Associated Press correspondent with the Eighth Army, described the fighting on that front:

Overgrown Creek

"In cold, stinging rain men of the Eighth Army scooped out machine-gun pits in hillside groves, wrestled artillery through wallows and fanned out grimly in offensive patrols. 'Blood River' is what the forward troops call the shallow, sluggish stream that Italian maps mark as Fiume Sangro. Its broad basin is studded with hidden mines. Enemy firepower is massed effectively at

60 Towns and Hamlets Retaken as Russians Fan Out Past Kiev

London (Thursday), Nov. 11 (AP). Russia's Ukranian army stormed westward through a battlefield littered with 5000 German dead and abandoned Nazi materiel yesterday, fanning out on a 70-mile front beyond captured Kiev to within 40 miles of the Zhitomir rail junction, Moscow said today.

More than 60 towns and hamlets—two of them district centers—fell to the continuing Russian offensive which broke across the Teterev River in the north and surged to Komarovka in the central sector. Komarovka, northeast of Zhitomir, is also 48 miles southeast of Korosten, another rail center which the Germans must hold if they would protect their north-south communications. This push marked an advance of 42 miles due west of Kiev.

(The British radio said Russian troops were reported to be 13 miles from Korosten. The broadcast, in the German language, was recorded by CBS and gave no further details.

Secretary Gives Review of Parley in Ride to White House

By Edward T. Folliard

Secretary of State Cordell Hull, United States representative at the conference that drew up the epochal Pact of Moscow, came home from his 26,000-mile air journey yesterday, and got a welcome unique in the annals of Washington.

President Roosevelt was at the National Airport to grasp the hand of the 72-year-old Tennessean, a courtesy usually reserved for visiting kings and other chiefs of state.

Capitol Hill also was represented, and none applauded Secretary Hull with more ardor than two members of a rival political party—the Republican Senators Austin of Vermont and White of Maine.

Secretary Hull, tired but fit, appeared somewhat bewildered when he saw the crowd gathered on the ramp. He came down the gangplank of the four-motored transport, embraced and kissed the waiting Mrs. Hull, and then walked over to greet President Roosevelt.

"Well, well—," he said.

"You're looking extremely well, Cordell," the President said, pumping his hand. "You're an hour ahead of time."

"You don't know how much I appreciate this," said Hull.

"We'll give you the keys to the city," the President said, laughing.

Senator Harry S. Byrd (Democrat) of Virginia later suggested something more concrete—the Congressional Medal of Honor.

While Secretary Hull was standing talking to the President, his erstwhile colleagues in the Senate pushed in to clasp his hand. Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky, the Democratic leader, was one of them.

"Hello, pahdner," said Hull, using an old Tennessee mountain greet-

Marines Slay ½ of Jap Force That Landed From Barges

By William F. Boni

Southwest Pacific Allied Headquarters (Thursday), Nov. 11 (AP), United States Marines have killed an estimated half of the Japanese force which landed from barges north of their Bougainville beachhead, and United States Army troops have put ashore without loss, despite a big enemy air attack, to reinforce the northern Solomons position.

The Marines, employing tanks, decisively defeated the Japanese Tuesday, 4 miles north of the original Marine position on Cape Torokina, Gen. MacArthur's Headquarters reported today.

From the South Pacific headquarters of Admiral Halsey came reports that a large force of Army troops landed at Empress Augusta Bay Monday. Subsequently, approximately 60 Japanese divebombers and fighters swept in for a raid, damaging one ship.

Allied fighters intercepted, shooting down at least 13 of 20 divebombers and 13 of 40 fighters against loss of 8 of their own. After dark Monday, Japanese planes attacked again, hitting a combat task force screening transports. The task force's antiaircraft accounted for several Jap planes, Admiral Halsey's headquarters said. Four other bombers and three fighters probably were destroyed.

General MacArthur said the Marines killed 150 Japanese in the Tuesday clash.

Jap Dead Totals 300

Since the Marines first invaded Bougainville, last big enemy Solomons base barring the eastern approaches to Rabaul, they have killed an estimated 300 Japanese, including some on the south end of the beachhead.

The positions of the barge-landed Japanese at the mouth of the Laruma River, 4 miles north of the Marine position on Cape Torokina, were blasted by Mitchell medium bombers and fighters and a number of barges were destroyed.

MacArthur's Headquarters listed losses of 67 Japanese planes in all sectors of the Southwest (MacArthur) and South (Admiral Halsey)

New Blows at Japs Soon, Nimitz Predicts

Pearl Harbor, Nov. 10 (INS).—Admiral Chester W. Nimitz declared today that new offensive operations against the Japanese will be launched "in the immediate future."

The United States Pacific fleet commander said America now possesses "the means with which to make the offensive to blast the Japs out of the island strongholds."

The admiral emphasized, however, that it will be necessary to traverse huge expanses of sea "to reach even the outer rim of the Japanese defensive system."

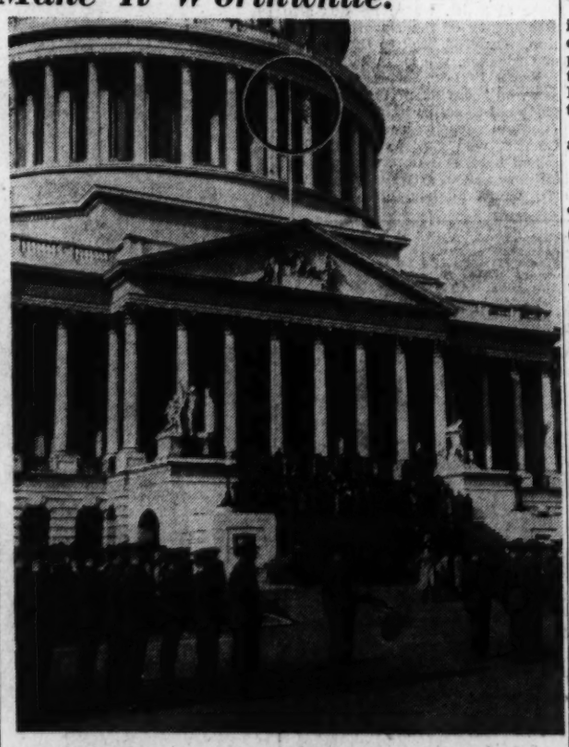
Make It Worthwhile!



Harris & Ewing

A flag was raised yesterday at the Capitol. It was a historic flag—aymbolic of a stirring victory. It was the banner carried into battle by the heroes of Guadalcanal, and the occasion was the 168th anniversary of the founding of the United States Marine Corps. It was the Marines who carried the day on Guadalcanal—and their victory will be long remembered. They fought and died and triumphed—they couldn't lose—because they were fighting for a worthwhile cause, the preservation of the American way of life. It would be a hollow victory if the home front let them down. You can show your appreciation of their heroic sacrifice by contributing generously to the Community War Fund. Today is the last day. WRA Women Workers Feted Jap Internees, Probers Told

Tule Lake, Calif., Nov. 10 (INS).—Charges that the War Relocation Authorities encouraged white women at the Tule Lake segregation camp to entertain male Jap internees were expected to be included in a report being prepared tonight by a legislative committee investigating riots at the camp.

Before the committee was testimony of two WRA women employes, Mrs. Seemah Battat, attractive brunette secretary, and Mrs. Evea Adams, camp school teacher.

Mrs. Battat testified before the committee that a husky young Japanese attempted to force his way into her apartment at the camp one night.

She declared that the Jap shoved his foot in the door after she responded to his knocking.

"He said he only wanted to come in and talk," Mrs. Battat said.

Mrs. Battat related she was not fully clothed.

"I stamped my heel hard on his toe and he went away."

The Japanese, one of 16,000 at Tule Lake who have professed their allegiance to Japan, was arrested by Edward Borbeck, camp security guard.

Borbeck testified that the Japanese claimed he had been invited to Mrs. Battat's apartment. This was denied heatedly by Mrs. Battat.

Borbeck is the WRA guard who was beaten by rebellious Japs last Thursday night just before the Army moved in to restore order in the vast camp.

During her testimony Mrs. Battat was asked by one of the State

500 Planes Raid Europe by Day

London (Thursday), Nov. 11 (AP). More than 500 Britain-based planes raided Hitler's Europe yesterday in one of the Allies' biggest daylight aerial offensives in weeks and a large force of RAF bombers was reported to have crossed the Channel coast late last night to keep up the bombing assault.

A major operation yesterday was the attack by American Marauder bombers on the Nazi air base of Chievres, near Brussels.

Early today a few antiaircraft guns in the London area fired upon a single plane which was not immediately identified. No air raid alert was sounded.

A dozen attacks were executed by Allied squadrons in the daylight operations.

Few enemy fighters rose to meet the raiders, and from the operations only one Allied fighter was reported missing.

The American force which blasted the Chievres base, just 30 miles southwest of Brussels and 115 air miles from Dover on the English coast, lost no planes.

Returning fliers said their bombs fell among at least 30 twin-engined enemy bombers in the air base's principal dispersal area, and destroyed at least four while scoring direct hits on a hangar.

Targets in northern France felt the sting of RAF Typhoons, Whirlwinds and Mustangs, while an additional force of Whirlwinds swept over the Isle of Guernsey and attacked enemy coastal vessels.

In the Lezardrieux Estuary in Brittany, Typhoon fighter bombers landed at least one bomb squarely on an enemy ship.

The Marauders and their Spitfire escort met no enemy planes. This underscored an RAF commentator's report today that the German air force had been forced to conserve its resources to defend prime Nazi targets.

Hull Is Greeted Here by President

ing.

Undersecretary of State Edward R. Stettinius, jr., and Maj. Gen. Edwin (Pa.) Watson, White House secretary, asked the President if he wanted to confer with Hull.

"Let's make it tomorrow," the President said, "he's tired."

But Hull, who appears to have taken some of the accent off youth around Washington, had another idea.

"Why can't Frances and I ride back with you and we can talk," he suggested.

And so he and Mrs. Hull got into the limousine and drove to the White House with the President. There Mr. Roosevelt not only got a first-hand story of the events at Moscow, he doubtless got the final word on the next big act on the international stage: the forthcoming conference between him, Prime Minister Churchill and Marshal Stalin.

Received "Every Courtesy"

Secretary Hull on his arrival, had a statement ready for the press, and this was given out by Michael McDermott, chief of the Division of Information, who made the trip to Moscow with him.

"On our mission abroad," Hull said, "we received every courtesy, every hospitality and every consideration. For two weeks the conference in Moscow worked together as a single unit in an atmosphere of understanding and trust and friendliness and cooperation.

"We agreed upon a broad basic program of international cooperation. The program contemplates the hastening of victory over the Axis powers, also the preservation of peace and the promotion of human welfare in the postwar world.

"I believe that our country and other peace-loving countries have a vast opportunity to profit by the program of policies outlined by the Moscow Conference. I have supreme faith that they will avail themselves of that opportunity."

Good Air Traveler

Dr. Matthew W. Perry of 2607 31st st. nw., who flew to Moscow and back with the American delegation, said Hull was a superb air traveler—notwithstanding that this was his first flight. He said he had stood up well under the trip, had been in good health throughout, and had returned home in excellent shape.

Army men in the crew of the big transport said Hull appeared to be the only passenger who did not feel any ill effects from the arduous journey. He told one of them that he just sat back and pretended he was in a parlor car. But at one point he went into the pilot's cabin and watched the plane make a landing.

Ironically, the only mishap of the whole 26,000-mile trip occurred on the way from the airport to the White House. A motorcycle policeman, escorting the President's car, ran into a taxicab and was thrown to the street.

In the crowd that gathered at the airport to welcome Secretary Hull and his party were the Chinese Ambassador, Wei Tsa-ming; Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones, Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn, Assistant Secretary of State Berle, Assistant Secretary of State Long, Nelson Rockefeller, Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs; L. S. Rowe, director general of the Pan American Union; Myron Taylor, special envoy to the Vatican and Admiral William Standley, former Ambassador to Russia.

The Capitol Hill delegation, besides those mentioned, included Senators George of Georgia, O'Mahoney of Wyoming, McKellar and Stewart of Tennessee, Hatch of New Mexico, Guffey of Pennsylvania, and Lucas of Illinois. Col. Ed Halsey, secretary of the Senate, also was on hand, as were Wall Doxey, sergeant-at-arms of the Senate, and Leslie Biffle, secretary to the majority.

Senator Byrd said Secretary Hull had achieved "a diplomatic success nearly beyond measure.' He felt, therefore, that he should receive the highst honor a grateful republic can bestow upon him.

"I would suggest," he said, "that he be awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor, and that this be presented to him at a joint session of Congress."

Representative Boykin (Democrat) of Alabama and Representative Scott (Republican) of Pennsylvania offered resolutions proposing that the Senate and House meet jointly to receive Hull's report on the Moscow Conference. Boykin's resolution suggested also that Congress tender to him the Nation's thanks.

the most shallow charge. It was like two tomcats in a room. We were both firing torpedoes at every chance."

Meanwhile, the Borie had been hurt, mainly from the ramming. The forward engine room was flooded, but the crew there kept the turbines operating—operating in water up to their necks.

The blond young pug-nosed skipper told of other heroic conduct of his crew. One Negro mess attendant, whose battle station was "first loader" on one of the 4-inch guns, became a "one-man gun crew" as the battle continued, getting the ammunition, loading the gun and then firing.

At another weapon, Gunner's Mate First Class K. J. Rennells of Jersey City kept firing despite failure of the mechanism. He pulled the latch with his hand, and each time the recoil battered his arm "until it was as big as his leg."

Under the terrific fire, the submarine was battered by repeated hits, and finally exploded and sank, Hutchins said.

Badly crippled, the 23-year-old Borie then started to limp back to its task force through the North Atlantic storm. All electric light power was knocked out, as well as the radio and heating plant. There was no fresh water for the crew.

Torpedoes, torpedo tubes, guns and other weight topside were cut loose and thrown overboard in an effort to save the listing vessel.

"There was a small auxiliary radio aboard, but we had lost all the gasoline aboard," reported Hutchins. "So we collected all the cigarette-lighter fluid aboard, mixed the doctor's alcohol with kerosene and got enough fuel to use the generator for a short message."

The message was picked up and planes from the Card located the ship. Despite a 15 to 20-foot sea, all but 27 members of the Borie's crew were rescued by the task force destroyers.

Then the hulk was sent to the bottom by bombs from the carrier's planes.

Loss of the Borie was announced yesterday along with that of two other American destroyers—the modern craft Henley and Chevalier—both sunk in South Pacific last month.

The Henley, a 1500-tonner commanded by Comdr. Carlton R. Adams of Wilmington, N. C., was announced only as having been sunk in the South Pacific in October. Adams is safe, and the next of kin of casualties have been notified.

The Chevalier, a 2100-ton craft, was damaged in the night battle off Vella LaVella, October 6. It later collided with another United States destroyer, and subsequently broke in two and sank. Next of kin of casualties have been informed. Lieut. Comdr. George R. Wilson of Oakland, Calif., skipper of the vessel, was wounded but survives.

In telling of the Borie incident, the Navy departed from its usual official restraint. The battle of the destroyer was termed a "saga," and of the rescue operations, the Navy said:

"It is a tribute to the seamanship of the crews of the Goff and the Barry that all but 27 of the Borie's crew were saved. It was a stormy night, with the Atlantic rolling up huge waves, a night that would cause concern to the most modern, water-tight ship, let alone an overage destroyer with her hull bashed in."

Naval officers noted that the heroic skipper of the Borie provided an outstanding example of the way the young reserve officers are making a distinguished record afloat. Hutchins, a Naval Academy graduate in 1936, resigned from the Navy in 1938. He returned in January, 1942, and was assigned to sea duty on the Borie less than a year ago. He became her skipper only a few weeks before the battle.

Rabaul, the New Britain sea-air stronghold on which Japan relies heavily to preserve its Bougainville position, was raided at night by Mitchell medium bombers, the communique said. Fires and explosions resulted.

MacArthur's air arm hit the Japanese at Alexishafen in the Madang area of New Guinea, destroying 21 planes on the ground and downing 14 of between 20 and 30 enemy interceptors. The Jap units were reinforcements moved in from the north.

Other grounded planes were damaged and two additional enemy interceptors were listed as probable losses. Three of the raiding fighters were lost. The fighters escorted attack planes and medium bombers on two coordinated bombing and strafing missions which were made at low altitude.

Presumably the Jap force which moved down Bougainville's west coast from Buka in the barges had intended to join with bypassed Japanese on the south end of the Marine beachhead in exerting a pincers against Empress Augusta Bay.

The Marines threw tanks and artillery against the northern force. Marine casualties in Tuesday's fight were characterized as light.

The Japanese air force which made Monday's attack was believed to have come from Rabaul, possibly making one stop at Buka on the way.

In the vicinity of Kavieng, New Ireland, three convoys were sighted and attacked beginning Monday night, indicating the Japanese still are reinforcing Rabaul where enemy plane and ship losses have been heavy. A 10,000-ton merchantman, under escort of destroyers and possibly a light cruiser, was sunk by bombs of a Liberator.

About the same time Monday night, a United States Navy Catalina attacked a group of ships 95 miles northwest of Rabaul, which included a destroyer, sub chaser and two merchantmen.

Tuesday morning, a Liberator bombed a convoy of one destroyer and two large freighter-transports near Mussau Island near the northwestern tip of New Ireland. Results were not reported.

New York, Nov. 10 (AP).—A Japanese domestic broadcast recorded by United States Government monitors declared tonight that 96 Allied vessels had been sunk or damaged and "more than 288 planes shot down" in the Pacific in the last 10 days.

Japanese losses were given in the broadcast as "one destroyer sunk, one cruiser slightly damaged, and 56 planes."

[The Navy Department in Washington, in announcing yesterday the loss in October of the destroyers Henley and Chevalier said that all sinkings of United States vessels in the South and Southwest PPacific now have been announced an official refutation of Japanese claims that numerous United States warships have been sunk in that area this month.—Editor's note.]

D. C. Skipper in Sub War Indorsed for Coveted Medal

Capt. Arnold J. (Buster) Isbell, USN, who has had "no Sunday off for the last five years," has been recommended by the Navy for the Distinguished Service Medal—and by his friends to change his nick name to "Sub-Buster."

Skipper of the USS Card, whose air squadrons and escort vessels have destroyed "more submarines than any team in naval history," "Sub-Buster" Isbell and his men have won a Presidential Unit Citation after their recent return to an East Coast port.

Besides Captain Isbell, who lives with his family at 1841 Kilbourne pl. nw., another Washington man was mentioned in the Navy report on the squadron's successful anti-submarine campaign.

James Henry O'Hagan, jr., aviation machinist's mate, third class, USNR, whose parents live at 2914 10th st. ne., was the turret gunner of an Avenger plane that crashed in action.

The pilot of the plane, Lieut. Asbury H. Sallenger of Goldsboro, N. C., and O'Hagan remained in a life raft for seven hours before they were picked up by the USS Barry.

Ensign John F. Sprague of Sunnyside, Wash., was pilot of another plane that was in the same action. Sprague dived in to machine-gun the sub that was later bombed by Sallenger. He was not seen again and is listed as missing in action.

Lieutenant Sallenger reported that he was forced to make a water landing after his fuselage had been hit by "AA" and his wing set afire.

Before he was forced down, however, he said: "I made my 'drop' and looked back to make sure my bombs exploded in the proper place. The explosions, which seemed to go off right under the sub, covered it with water.

"I got out of the plane and saw that the turret gunner, O'Hagan, was out all right, but saw no sign of the radio operator, Downes (John David Downes of Long Island, N. Y.)."

Downes is listed as missing in action.

Sallenger and O'Hagan, after paddling their way through the stricken U-boat's oil slick "so new we could smell fresh oil," were spotted by planes from the Card and finally picked up by the Barry.

Captain Isbell, born in Iowa September 22, 1899, was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1920 and entered naval aviation three years later. In 1938, his Navy Training Squadron Four received the Herbert Schiff Memorial Trophy for flying 18,000 hours without accident, the safety record for flying of the year.

On neutrality patrol duty since the outbreak of war in Europe, Captain Isbell said yesterday that "we in the Atlantic have been on duty for a year and a half longer than the Navy in the Pacific."

He was among the leading officers to organize the Atlantic convoy system. In June, 1942, he was ordered to Alaska and became commandant of the Naval Operations Base at Sitka, where he was also commander of the Naval Air Station. Ordered back to the Bureau of Ordnance, where he had served between 1931-33, in March of this year, he "convinced" the Navy Department to assign him to sea duty.

Captain Isbell has two sons, Charlie, who goes to junior high school here, and Don, who attends Military School at Waynesboro, Va. His wife's mother, Mrs. Lois K. Mayes, also lives with the family.

O'Hagan, who is 20 years old, was born in Albany, N. Y. His family came here about nine years ago and James went to St. Anthony's grade and high school. In June, 1942, he enlisted in the Navy. Besides his parents, his two sisters, Misses Rosemary and Joan O'Hagan, and a brother, Joseph, live at the 10th st. address.

Mrs. O'Hagan said yesterday that she received a letter from her son two days ago and "he's fine."

Mirandas Match Wits With Probers

By Mary Spargo

Two handsome Mexican-born munitions dealers, large stockholders in the Brewster Aeronautical Corp., yesterday suavely matched wits with the House Naval Affairs Subcommittee investigating the company's tangled affairs and, so far as the hearing went, won hands down.

Alfred J. Miranda, jr., and Ignacio J. Miranda, descendants of a hero of the American Revolutionary War, who returned to South America in an attempt to free Colombia and Venezuela of Spanish domination, failed to live up to what they themselves described in effect as their advance billing as villains of the Brewster piece.

On the record, established by Representative Grant (Republican), of Indiana, they were not even convicted of having violated the State Department's "moral embargo" of 1938 against selling arms to Japan, then making war on civilians in China.

There were statements by committee members after the hearing that their testimony may form an important piece of the mosaic the committee is slowly putting together in its attempt to get a picture of what actually caused the Brewster Corp. to fail to get out planes desperately needed by the United States Navy.

The importance of the testimony was not clear on the record, except possibly in politely deprecating intimations on the part of the Mirandas that the new managements put in by the Navy Department were the real answer to production failures.

Neither brother made any secret of the fact that he was carefully prepared by his counsel, Samuel Kaufman of New York, for the hearing. Ignaccio J. Miranda told reporters that he felt "quite undressed" because his counsel had refused to permit him to wear his customary fresh flower in his buttonhole. He further disclosed that counsel had told him not to use his customary ornate cigarette holder.

Flashing his white teeth in a wide smile, I. J. Miranda explained the orders from counsel:

"You see, he thought we should appear very conservative, indeed, before members of Congress. Otherwise, they might not like us."

An official report from the Securities Exchange Commission has previously described the brothers as "extremely ingratiating." Their behavior substantiated that part of the report which stated that one of the reasons the brothers have become multimillionaires, with a New York penthouse and a palatial home in Mexico City, international citizens with world-wide connections, is a gift of extraordinary charm.

So far as other parts of the report, including charges of smuggling arms to Japan through fictitious agents in Siam goes, already in committee records, yesterday's testimony failed to verify it. The brothers did not admit any such dealings, and their statements, for now at least, went unchallenged.

Some hours after the hearing concluded last night, committee counsel disclosed that what was described "as an extraordinary influx of West Coast witnesses to the East," caused a last-minute cancellation of a projected trip to California.

Lucien Shore, who was a Treasury official when the amendment to the 1940 Revenue Act, for which Brewster and two other companies raised $65.000 as a lobbying fund, is on his way East.

Maj. Reuben Fleet, $60,000-a-year consultant for Consolidated-Vultee, who was in the preliminary negotiations for the slush fund and later withdrew, according to Zeus Suichek, Brewester official, will testify this morning.

C. A. Van Dusen and Ralph Singer, former Brewster presidents, whose testimony was wanted, are also headed toward Washington.

G. F. Chapline, a former Brewster president, now a commander in the Navy, has just been sent to the South Pacific, although the Navy was notified several weeks ago that he would be wanted as a witness.

Only remaining scheduled witnesses on the West Coast are Commander R. T. McCart, former chief engineer at Brewster, and Robert Gross, president of Lockheed, one of the three companies participating in the lobbying fund. The desired amendment was introduced by former Senator Clyde Herring (Democrat) of Iowa, and the fund, according to previous testimony, was paid to W. D. Jamieson, Washington attorney, former Democratic Representative from Iowa and Frank J. Comfort, Democratic National Committeeman from the same State.

Relief Parley Delegates Hold First Session at Atlantic City

By Christine Sadler

Atlantic City, N. J., Nov. 10. Welcomed into this seaside resort by huge placards bearing greetings from the mayor, delegates to the first conference of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration met briefly tonight in preparation for the election tomorrow of Herbert H. Lehman, former Governor of New York, as director general and the beginning of a five-week inquiry into ways aid can be extended to suffering victims of Axis aggression.

Dean Acheson of the United States State Department in opening the meeting as this country's delegates and temporary host chairman, declared the first task of rehabilitation "of course must fall upon the soldiers" and that so long as military operations continue, "the soldiers must be in control."

"But this organization can mobilize and present the needs, passing upon them in the light of equitable and just standards determined here by agreement," he said.

"It can finance purchases which cannot otherwise be made and which must be made. It can organize the care of the millions of the homeless and the exiles."

The primary task facing UNRRA, he said, is to assist the liberated areas to meet their emergency needs, tiding them over the period between the end of exploitation by the enemy and the reestablishment of their own production for their own needs.

During this period, Acheson said, effective organization and the delivery of esential goods at the "right place at the right time" will be quite as important as financial aid.

Immensity of the task before UNRRA was outlined in a bulletin pointing out that 35 nations have been overrun and more than 500 million people enslaved in Asia and Europe during World War II.

The Greek delegate, Kyriatos Varvaressos, former minister of finance in his country, in reply to Acheson, speaking, he said, as a representative of one of the most devastated countries of Europe, stated that the "populations of occupied Europe do not wish to depend on relief longer than will be strictly necessary." He said his country would have to receive adequate relief in order to regain its health and restore its economy but emphasized its desire to become self-sufficient at the earliest possible moment.

A reception at the Claridge Hotel in honor of the visiting delegates was held following the preliminary meeting.

Atlantic City's mayor, Thomas D. Taggart, jr., "Two-gun Tom" since the time he cleaned up the city's boardwalk section a few years ago, declared in his proclamation welcoming the UNRRA that the date of the conference would henceforth be known in the town's histories as "United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration time."

The temporary committee appointed by Acheston had delegates from the following countries as chairmen: Rules, United States; nominations, Mexico; credentials, Chile; agenda, Czechoslovakia, and Observers, Egypt.

Next Nine Months To See Worst Tire Shortage

The most serious tire shortage of the war will be felt in the next six to nine months, Rubber Director Bradley Dewey reported yesterday.

Dewey said the only way there will be enough tires for essential civilian transportation and the minimum requirements of war will be for every auto owner to redouble efforts at conservation.

"The nonessential driver will not get a new tire in the visible future," Dewey said,

Future for Russia Bright, Nelson Says

Disclosing that he went to Russia on a "special mission for the President," War Production Chief Donald M. Nelson yesterday told newsmen that he found the Soviet Union a "great industrial nation which will be even greater after the war."

Spending a week in England, Nelson went to Algiers, then to Teheran, Iran, and on to Stalingrad and Moscow, to spend a total of three weeks studying Russian production.

Nelson said his mission was in the "White House-State Department category and hence cannot be disclosed."

Highlights of his press conference report follows:

"Nearly every American plane" returning to England from bombing missions over the continent of Europe returns with some battle damage.

"The air service command is doing a terrific production job, putting 80 per cent of the damaged planes back in service in 24 hours, another 10 per cent in 48 hours, and another 10 per cent have to be rebuilt.

"I wish American workers could see what extra production means. The more planes we have the more protection that can be given and more of them will come back safely. . . .

"I spent 24 hours in Stalingrad. If you can imagine an industrial city like Milwaukee, absolutely and completely destroyed—industrial plants laid absolutely flat. . . .

"There is a feeling that Russia is fighting an all-out war. Everyone is working for the Red army. No sacrifice is too great. . . .

"I saw a Russian steel plant as good as any in this country and 45 per cent of its employes were women. . . .

"They told me the women worked just as efficiently as the men they replaced. . . .

"Most Russian plants operate on two 11-hour shifts and a six-day week. . . . Some heavy industries operate on three 8-hour shifts. . . .

"I found Stalin to be a regular fellow. With him an hour and a half. He has a tremendous grasp of problems growing out of the war and problems that Russia will face in the peace to follow. A keen sense of humor, he uses few words, short, direct, and to the point. . . .

"The Russians have done a better job of perfecting the flow of materials into and out of their plants than we have. I didn't see any excess parts lying around . . .

"I visited a plane plant in Siberia where planes are tested regardless of the weather, even when it is 50 degres below . . .

"They waste no time on finish or appearance. I asked why they did not polish gun barrels and was told that the polish doesn't kill Germans, but that the gun was all right inside . . .

"Everything seemed to be measured in terms of whether it killed Germans . . .

"There were three American items which I found mentioned all over Russia—the Airacobra (P-39 fighter), because it kills a lot of Germans; the jeep, which they are crazy about, and the 2½-ton truck."

Nelson revealed that he talked with Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower while in Algiers and sent back home instructions to make certain changes in the production program which Eisenhower requested.

He said that he was referring to postwar business, rather than to lend-lease when he stated in a Monday night address that Stalin told him that "any obligation undertaken by this government (Russia) will be repaid in full, and not by token payments." The statement was interpreted as a reference to lend-lease when it was made. Nelson pointed out, however, that he has no direct authority over lend-lease matters.

as the Germans retreated before the massed Soviet artillery lined up at 20-yard intervals. Their formations smashed by the devastating barrage, the Germans abandoned food, ammunition, guns, trucks, a train and tanks in their flight.

The Moscow midnight communique, recorded by the Soviet radio monitor here, said 19 German tanks and 8 self-propelled guns were blown up by the Germans, but the Russians were able to capture intact more than 75 big guns, 37 tanks, 115 trucks and numerous dumps as well as prisoners.

An earlier Russian communique listed as captured a town which might have been Khorlyevka, but later corrections indicated that Kohrlyevka had not yet been reached. Khorlyevka is 35 miles southeast of Zhitomir and 66 miles from Kiev.

Rain, cold and fog failed to halt the Russian drive, which also reached south to Vasilev, 33 miles below Kiev and only 20 miles northeast of the rail city of Byelaya Tserkov. This column appeared to be aiming at a junction with the Russians west of the Dnieper near Pereyaslav and it was possible the two forces had already met.

Nazis Admit Withdrawals

The Germans admitted withdrawals in the Kiev area and one Nazi reporter broadcast in a description of the fighting that "all hell broke loose."

In the Crimea, where Moscow dispatches indicated the Russians were girding for a major drive, Soviet marines, supported by fighter planes, smashed back German tanks thrown against the Russian beachheads on the Kerch Peninsula. The Moscow radio said the Russians gained ground.

In the narrow Kerch strait German torpedo launches sought to halt barges and launches bringing in Russian reinforcements. Red army planes and heavy guns sank two German torpedo launches, a patrol cutter and a high speed landing barge.

There was heavy fighting in the Nevel area, where Russian spearheads were approximately 50 miles from the Latvian border. The Russians moved on through minefields and barbed wire to capture several strongly fortified areas, beating off five counterattacks and wiping out a German battalion.

Russian Fire Described

The German reporter in a Berlin radio broadcast, described a visit to the Kiev sector with the echo of Russian guns still ringing in his ears.

"It is the concentrated fire of two artillery divisions and one grenade thrower division consisting entirely of salvo guns," he said. "This may be estimated to represent at least 500 barrels concentrated on the narrowest space—one barrel for each 20 yards. Behind this belt of fire there were seven rifle divisions and huge armored forces in readiness. And then there appeared on the horizon packs of battle planes which dropped their bombs over our positions. All hell broke loose."

Far to the south in the Dnieper River loop the Germans also faced disaster. They reported attacks on the Kherson bridgehead north of Krivoi Rog and southwest of Dnepropetrovsk which, they said, were frustrated.

At Nikopol, one of Russia's most important manganese mine centers, the Red army was reported gradually forcing the Germans from the bridgehead they still held on the southern bank of the Dnieper opposite the town.

House Vote Extends Quezon's Term

Committee leaders into the House well to urge extension of Quezon's term as a war emergency measure and a matter of Philippine "self-defense."

Rayburn reminded the House that Osmena had put aside any personal ambitions he might have to support the move, and urged members not to stack their judgment against the best military opinion of U. S. Army and Navy leaders, and the Philippine government in exile. "There is no government in the Philippine Islands today," said Rayburn.

J. M. Elizalde, Philippine resident commissioner, said Osmena has authorized him to state that he favored continuation of Quezon as President.

Insular Affairs Chairman Bell (Democrat) of Missouri said every free voice in the Philippines had been silenced, that the government in exile must be kept intact to aid General MacArthur in fulfilling his pledge to again free the islands.

A large bloc of Republicans, led by Eaton of New Jersey and Wadsworth of New York, broke away from the party line to support the resolution.

The emergency measure, which cleared the Senate Tuesday without debate or a single "no" vote, provides that "the present President and Vice President of the Commonwealth of the Philippines shall continue in their respective offices until the President of the United States shall proclaim that constitutional processes and normal functions of Government shall have been restored in the Philippine Islands.

White Women Feted Jap Internees, Probers Are Told

Senate committee members, who concluded their two-day probe last night, whether there were any conscientious objectors working in the camp for the WRA.

"Yes," she replied. "I know of about six, all of them women, some school teachers. Some of these hold the viewpoint that the Japs were justified in the attack on Pearl Harbor.

"They entertained the Japs in their own homes on the project, up until November 1."

(It was on November 1 that a mob of Japs held WRA officials and about 100 employes virtual prisoners in the administration building.)

Mrs. Battat described the activities of the women who felt that the Jap attack on Pearl Harbor was justified.

She said the group organized into a "fellowship of reconciliation society" to foster principles of "brotherly love" for Japs openly disloyal to the United States.

Mrs. Adams testified she refused to participate.

"They (the leaders) said it was an organization for brotherly love all over the world and that it was an all-absorbing service and love to the Japanese," Mrs. Adams said.

Aroused by revelations made before the State Senate investigating committee, Representative Claire Engle (Democrat), whose congressional district embraces Tule Lake, said he was determined to see just how much money has been spent to "coddle" the 16,000 disloyal Japs at Tule Lake.

"I want to know what part of the two million dollars appropriated for recreational purposes at the relocation centers was spent on such rot," Engle said.

At a conference with Engle today, American Legion leaders, heads of civilian defense and farm representatives of the Tule Lake District demanded that the Army retain control of the segregation center.

He said that he hoped to maintain "parity" between prices and wages as a means of fighting inflation.

"If there are any good Americans who want to fight inflation the thing to do is not to ask for higher wages, but for lower prices."

He suggested that "equality of sacrifice" be replaced as a motto by "competition in sacrifice."

"The only reason the Little Steel formula exists at all (instead of a flat wage freeze) is to leave the door open to underprivileged and underpaid white collar and State and municipal employes who have not had their 15 per cent adjustment."

This is no time for a windy story. You're only one jump ahead of Winter! Let's see what happens. Out comes the old overcoat. M-m-m, pretty sad looking—sort of frowzy 'round the edges. "John—don't you dare wear that thing". And then it freezes. Now hold on, take it easy. From here on, it's a cinch. Like most men on their toes, you'll naturally barge into Bond's—do your picking from a huge selection—pay a sensible price—overcoats are Rochester tailored. That's one big reason for going there. Jury May Decide De Marigny's Fate Today; Opposing Counsel Winding Up Final Plea

Nassau, Nov. 10 (AP).—Opposing attorneys pictured Alfred de Marigny today as a scheming killer who did away with his father-in-law in an effort to get his hands on the gold miner's great fortune, and as an innocent man who is the victim of faked evidence.

Sharp-tongued Attorney General Eric Hallinan and eloquent Godfrey Higgs presented the vastly different views to the Bahamas Supreme Court jury which, probably tomorrow, will decide whether the handsome De Marigny is guilty of murder in connection with the bludgeon and torch slaying of Sir Harry Oakes last July.

Higgs told the jury to purge from their minds "any prejudices and preopinions," and said:

"You must decide whether he leaves the court a free man or whether he is to be taken from her to hang by the neck.

"There are only two verdicts open to you."

Nancy Listens Raptly

Nancy Oakes de Marigny, wife of the accused, listened with rapt interest to Higgs' declaration that the testimony against her husband is "a combination of statements of an irrelevant nature and deliberate lying by police officers whose duty is to protect the public.

But she aroused suddenly and hurried from the courtroom this afternoon when the Attorney General declared that her 68-year-old father apparently was struck four times on the head by an attacker who invaded his bedroom.

Hallihan did not complete his argument, and will be permitted to speak for one more hour tomorrow before Chief Justice Sir Oscar Bedford Daly launches into his charge to the jury. Higgs centered his attack on the fingerprint—exhibit J—which Police Capt. James O. Barker of Miami said he lifted from a bedscreen in the bedroom at Oakes' estate, Westbourne, where the assault took place during the early morning hours of July 8. It is an impression of De Marigny's right little finger, both sides agree to that.

Says It Was Faked

But Higgs charged again, just as he did earlier in the trial, that the fingerprint was faked.

"I suggest that lift never came from the screen," he shouted, quoting Police Capt. Maurice B. O'Neil of New Orleans, and Leonarde Keeler, private criminologist, as saying the print on exhibit could not have been lifted from the screen surface.

Higgs recalled that Police Capt. E. W. Melchen, also of Miami, took De Marigny to the second floor of Westbourne for questioning, bringing to the jurors' minds the statement of De Marigny that he was asked to pour a glass of water for the officer.

"The defense alleges," and Higgs' voice here was loud and strong, "that the accused was taken upstairs for the purpose of getting his fingerprint on some object."

Higgs insisted that De Marigny had established conclusively, and had witnesses who backed him up, that he was at home at the time of the slaying in a house 5 miles away.

Nancy Refuses Gift

Hallinan said there was such "a rising crescendo of enmity between him (De Marigny) and the Oakes family that finally he was in such a predicament that in an attempt to get control of the family fortune he was willing to resort to murder."

"On May 26," he continued, "Nancy writes a letter to her mother rejecting a gift of £2000 (about $8400) and telling her mother that unless she regards De Marigny with respect, she will break off with the family.

"Does this sound like a letter written by a girl of 19? It sounds like a man saying 'If I can't be with Nancy I'll cut her off from her family.' It's a gambler's throw. Either they will reject their daughter or accept him."

If he were rejected, Hallinan said, "he would be thrown back on his own resources. His chicken farm is mere chicken feed to a man of his manner of living."

"Sir Harry planned to leave Nassau the next day," Hallinan continued, his voice soft and intense.

"The accused's wife was separated from him. The whole situation was slipping and he had to act.

"There was only one solution, to do away with the hazard of Sir Harry and then use the influence of Nancy and Sidney to win over Lady Oakes.

"Then the whole Oakes fortune would lie at his feet.

"That was the situation on the morning of July 8."

Hallinan referred to the eldest Oakes son, now Sir Sidney.

Allies Ask Badoglio to Oust Staff Chief as 'War Criminal'

London, Nov. 10 (AP).—The Allies have requested Premier Pietro Badoglio to remove Gen. Mario Roatta, Italian chief of staff, as a result of Yugoslav charges that he was a "war criminal" responsible for a reign of terror in Yugoslavia, it was diclosed today.

The Germans, meanwhile, harassed by guerilla activity from the Swiss border to the Franco-Italian Riviera, have offered amnesty to Italian and French patriots who surrender before November 15. The offer was believed aimed at an estimated 10,000 anti-Axis Italian troops who were reported to have dug in for the winter in the maritime Alps.

The case of General Roatta may be the first presented before the United Nations commission which is to be set up in London soon by the United States, Russia and Britain. The commission probably will decide whether Roatta will be sent to Yugoslavia for trial under terms of the Moscow Conference.

Minister of State Richard K. Law who told Commons today of the Allied request for Roatta's removal following an investigation of the Yugoslav charges, said Gen Dwight D. Eisenhower still had under consideration "the case of Gen Vittorio Ambrosio."

General Ambrosio also is charged with war crimes by the Yugoslavs.

Badoglio's cabinet, as announced September 30, included Roatta as chief of staff and Ambrosio as army chief of staff.

The German offer of amnesty appeared yesterday in newspapers in southern France and in northern Italy. Severe penalties were threatened for those who failed to take advantage of the "last warning."

Similar amnesty offers by the Vichy government to French guerillas on previous occasions had little or no effect.

A report from Madrid said the Italians in the maritime Alps, like the French guerillas in Savoy with whom they are reported in contact, are receiving airborne supplies and instructions, and even officers and technicians from the Allies.

Mentioned as a likely successor to Roatta in Badoglio's cabinet was Marshal Giovanni Messe, former Italian commander in Tunisia.

possible lords."

After the capture of San Salvo by Montgomery's troops last week, De Luce said "burned wrecks of Sherman (American-built) tanks lie among San Salvo's olive trees, where the lown-slung enemy self-propelled artillery fought at almost pointblank range." He described the Sangro as an "overgrown creek," but said it was a formidable military obstacle.

In yesterday's advance the Eighth Army reported encountering 45 major demolitions. The push took them through a dozen villages including Macerona, Valpicecola, Roccasicura, Montalto, Monticello and Sebiana.

Near Calabritto on part of Lieut. Gen. Mark W. Clark's Fifth Army Front, the Nazis launched a heavy counterattack against British troops, but were repulsed.

Corn to Yield Record Crop of 3 Billion Bushels for '43 in U.S.

The second largest corn crop on record in the United States—3,086,000,000 bushels—was forecast by the Agriculture Department yesterday on the basis of November 1 conditions.

While the predicted 1943 crop would be 90 million bushels under last year's record production, it would exceed the 10-year average yield (1932-1941) by 736 million bushels. Approximately 94 million acres of corn are expected to be harvested this year compared with 89,484,000 a year ago.

The November 1 report was an increase of one per cent over the department's October 1 forecast. Most farmers had husked enough corn to estimate yields and their reports indicated a higher yield per acre than for any year prior to 1942.

Harvesting of most late crops was well advanced by November 1 as dry weather offset the labor shortage and permitted field operations to progress with little interruption, the department said.

The total crop production in 1943 was estimated at about 18 per cent above the average for the 1923-32 predrought period and 6 per cent below last season's crop output.

"From every point of view, the record is one of great accomplishments under difficulties," the department said. "The acreage planted was only a few per cent under what seems likely to be the maximum to be xepected during the war. Crop yields per acre averaged 24 per cent above the 1923-32 level and slightly higher than the yields of any past season prior to the phenomenal yields of 1942."

The report credited the high production primarily to better farming practices and technical improvements.

Limited rainfall during October was unfavorable for seeding of winter grains and cover crops and for growth in pastures.

Sorghums for grain, a main source of feed in the Southwest, is expected to yield 107 million bushels from a record acreage, substantially more than the production in any year prior to 1941.

The department left unchanged its previous wheat production estimate of 835,816,000 bushels, considerably under the 1942 yield of 981,327,000 bushels.

Conditions on November 1 still indicated a potato crop of 389 million bushels. The largest previous crop was the 1928 harvest of 427 million bushels. Last year's potato production amounted to 371 million bushels.

Two per cent more milk cows were reported on the farms than at this time a year ago, but the total milk production November 1 decreased 2½ per cent.

30-Day Soft Coal Supply Allowed

Ton Curb Removed; New Limitation Program Planned

The Solid Fuels Administration yesterday authorized consumers of bituminous coal to buy up to a 30-day supply, removing the previous ban on deliveries to consumers with a 10-day supply.

A one-ton limitation on soft coal deliveries was removed simultaneously, but the one-ton restriction and the 10-day limitation were retained for anthracite.

Meanwhile, it was learned that Solid Fuels is drafting a permanent regulation designed to replace the present emergency ruling, but to maintain far-reaching controls over industrial coal inventories for the rest of the winter, if not for a longer period.

Many industrial coal consumers are operating with critically low reserves of coal, making the regulation necessary.

Under the proposed plan, industrial users generally will be limited to a 30-day supply, and excess inventories will be reduced gradually by the simple device of forbidding consumers with excess inventories to take more than 75 per cent of their normal supply.

There is no plan to seize excess stocks and move them physically to other locations.

The proposed plan would permit utilities a 60-day inventory as an extra precaution against a power breakdown anywhere.

(The Inland Steel Co. disclosed in Chicago that Secretary Ickes had sent out orders to place into full effect the contract agreement which he signed with President John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers.

Inland replied that it would comply for its mines, but expressed the view that the action was not in harmony with the national wage stabilization policy or with the War Labor Board coal decision. Wilfred Sykes, president of the company, and operating manager of the company's Wheelwright mine, stated that the miners would receive $1.50 a day additional compensation for only 11 minutes more work because daily travel time at the mine consumes 94 minutes of the 45 minutes assumed by the Ickes-Lewis pact.)

Meanwhile Secretary Ickes appointed two committees of coal operators to help him work out details concerning times and conditions of work in the coal mines under Government possession.

A bituminous coal advisory committee of eight men and an anthracite advisory committee of three will consult with Ickes on matters arising under his agreement with John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers.

These matters include wages for piece workers and loaders.

The bituminous committee follows:

Charles O'Neill, president of the United Eastern Coal Sales Co., New York; R. L. Ireland, jr., president Hanna Coal Co., Cleveland; L. E. Gaines, president of the New River Coal Co., Mount Hope, W. Va.; Duncan Kennedy, secretary, Kanawha Coal Operators Association, Charleston, W. Va.; D. A. Thomas, Alabama Mining Institute, Birmingham; George Campbell, vice president, Old Ben Coal Corp., Chicago; Kenneth A. Spencer, general manager, Pittsburgh & Midway Coal Co., Pittsburg, Kans.; Eugene McAuliffe, president, Union Pacific Coal Co., Omaha, Nebr.

The anthracite committee:

Maj. William W. Inglis, president, Glen Alden Coal Co., New York; R. E. Taggart, president, Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., Philadelphia; James Pierce, president, East Bear Ridge Collieries Co., Scranton, Pa.

Father Gets Year For Cruelty

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

BOY, 5, BEATEN—Through swollen lips, Arthur Haselton, jr. (upper) told a Chicago court yesterday his 6-foot 2-inch father (lower) beat and kicked him and then made him wipe up the blood-stained kitchen floor. The judge, wishing Illinois permitted the whipping post, gave a sentence of a year in prison and a $200 fine to the father, who testified that he "only kicked him once." The judge ordered young Arthur and his sister, Joyce, 4, taken to a juvenile home pending investigation of the competency of their mother, Virginia.

Kershner Here

Plea Made For Children Of Europe

Howard E. Kershner was in Washington yesterday to ask for United States shipments of food to children in German-occupied countries.

Director of the Internation Commission for Child Refugees and former director of relief in Europe for the American Friends Service Committee, Kershner will testify today before the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee holding hearings on Senate Resolution 100 which provides that food be sent to the Nazi-dominated children immediately.

"I think I can show them how to send food to those children without aiding the enemy or interfering with the war effort," Kershner said last night. "I'll tell the subcommittee that I think it would be good strategy to send the aid at this time."

Kershner, author of a new book, entitled "One Humanity," returned to this country last February from England, where he discussed child feeding with British officials and heads of governments in exile. He supervised the feeding of hundreds of thousands of children of parentage on both sides of the Spanish Civil War and directed the feeding of similar numbers of children in France from 1940 to 1942.

The subcommittee hearing was opened last Thursday with testimony from former President Herbert Hoover. Kershner urged public attendance when it resumes at 10 a. m. today in the Foreign Relations Room on Capitol Hill.

Bricker to Seek Presidential Nomination

Chicago, Nov. 10 (AP).—Gov. John W. Bricker of Ohio stated today at a press conference he would be a Republican candidate for President in the Ohio primaries in May.

BRICKER

The Governor declined to make a statement regarding any other 1944 campaign plans, but remarked, "I will definitely enter the Ohio primaries as a Republican presidential candidate. I think they're the second week in May—about May 14."

Bricker said present-day postwar planning "is not feasible because we can't anticipate postwar conditions." He added:

"Our Government must, in cooperation with other governments, meet postwar problems as they arise, or anticipate them before they come up and eliminate them. I think it would be dangerous to say what we are going to do when the war is over, because we are fighting a World War in cooperation with other nations, and one of the quickest ways to destroy that cooperation would be for the United States to take an adamant stand on their postwar position now. We must await developments."

Commenting on last week's elections, Bricker said:

"The New Deal is through. There isn't any question in my mind but that the American people are through with it. I don't think the Republican trend demonstrated in last week's elections will change even if the war is going on. We are in the midst of a definite trend."

A Republican victory at the polls in 1944 "would be an assurance to the world and to ourselves that we still govern ourselves," he said.

Although Bricker said he was in favor of a soldier ballot, he said such ballots must be secret to be effective.

"Frankly, I think the soldiers should be given every opportunity to vote, but it should be just as secret as any in the States," he said. "It should be most carefully guarded, and I doubt if it would be a good idea if we can't preserve secrecy, which would be more essential in the Army than any place else. The ballot ought to be exactly the same ballot the civilians vote on, with the names of candidates printed on it."

1942 Brand Cars Seen For 2 Years After War

Pittsburgh, Nov. 10 (AP).—"The only people designing postwar cars are advertising people," Charles F. Kettering, vice president of General Motors Corp., said today.

"We'll build 1942 models after the war for two or three years—it will all depend on how we are situated when the war ends. If the public wants a plastic car, we can give it to them," he said in an interview.

Army Planes Are Taken Off Antisub Patrol

Army Air forces have withdrawn from antisubmarine operations, leaving full responsibility for the war against enemy submersibles up to the Navy, the War Department announced yesterday.

The department announced that the action was taken because the Navy now has acquired sufficient planes and crews to take over complete responsibility for combating the submarine menace.

"Units which operated for the Army Air Forces will be absorbed for other combat duty by various air forces, some in theaters in operations," an Office of War Information announcement said, "but an exchange of aircraft between the Army and Navy will be effective."

The announcement said that Army planes were land-based and operated in three different war theaters on a world-wide mission to seek out and destroy hostile submarines at sea.

The Army Antisubmarine Command was put into operation in October, 1942, under Brig. Gen. Westside T. Larson. It was an outgrowth of the First Bomber Command, which had been engaged in antisubmarine activities since December 8, 1941.

Wings and squadrons of the Army Air Force Antisubmarine Command were organized for combat patrol work, assignments were made to theaters of operations and the War Department said, "depth charges were dropped in a number of oceans and seas with much success" against enemy submarines.

Peace Committee Will Meet Today To Issue Pledge

The Pledge for Peace Committee, a group of distinguished writers, economists and statesmen headed by Supreme Court Justice Owen J. Roberts, will meet at the Willard Hotel between 3 and 6 p. m. today to make public a peace pledge.

The meeting will serve as the opening gun in a national campaign to use the "pledge for peace" as a means of stimulating thought and discussion of America's part in the postwar world.

Members of the committee expected to attend the meeting include Dr. Albert Einstein, Clifton Fadiman, Margaret Culkin Banning, Upton Sinclair, Marjorie Kinman Rawlings, Raymond Clapper, Raymond Gram Swing, Rex Stout, Lawrence Tibbett and many others.

"And beneath the starry flag
We shall breathe the air again
Of the free land in our own beloved home."

FROM "TRAMP, TRAMP, TRAMP, THE BOYS ARE MARCHING..."

Give a soldier or a sailor a minute to himself and what does he want most?

Word from home. And to know how the campaign he's part of is being pictured to the folks back there in the U.S.A.—and to know how his front is dovetailing with all the rest of global strategy—and to learn what America is planning for his future after the war.

We're proud that he says TIME and LIFE are the best and most authentic sources he knows . . . not only for information about the war he's in . . . but for news from the home front . . . the fun and the talk . . . the good old American look and feel of things . . .

From TIME's overseas mail bag . . .

"TIME provides us in the far stretches of Alaska with grandstand seats at every active theater in the world. It is one of the contributions toward maintaining sanity in an apparently insane world."

Capt. W. P., U.S. Army

"The arrival of TIME's Pony Edition is one of the high points in my life each week. TIME is (and has been) about my only reliable source of news."

Lieut. Commander H. McC., U.S. Navy

"Here in Africa TIME's Pony Edition is as welcome as water. It's the best thing yet in news and you have no idea how much we all appreciate your efforts."

Cpl. L. K., U.S. Army

"Please don't skip sending TIME over here, it's the only way to get a real unbiased picture of home. Also, we, of the North African Air Force, are vain enough to think we've done a job and like to read about it . . . (Your Mediterranean bombing pictures are in my scrap book.)"

T/S D. T., U.S. Army Air Forces

"Here in South America it's not "I see by the paper"—but rather "I see by TIME."

Y 1/c J. B., U.S. Navy

"TIME is a constant joy to me. It makes the whole affair seem united and comprehensible; and even one's own work purposeful. Coming from a reticent Vermonter this sort of statement really means something."

Cpl. W. H. Jr., U.S. Army

"We're a TIME-hungry bunch here. Several of us receive the Pony Edition but we have to scout for new places to hide each copy until we've read it and are ready to pass it along. I don't need to say what TIME does for morale."

1st Lieut. F. L., M.C.

"In 'Bulltown' last week appeared copies of the August 2nd TIME—just twelve days on the way. An all-time record for speedy delivery! . . . TIME has definitely scored a morale bullseye . . ."

The Bull Sheet, U.S. Army Newspaper in India

"There is no magazine more eagerly read by both Americans and Aussies than LIFE. My copies have a phenomenal circulation."

Lieut. (j.g.) W. E., U.S. Navy

From LIFE's overseas mail bag . . .

"Even in Africa LIFE follows me around and the copies are certainly appreciated. Gives me quite a thrill to see your fine photos and recognize places I knew even before I read the captions. There is so little of military information we of the AEF can write to our loved ones at home that your magazine offers a wonderful go-between for us.

That is why I'm enclosing a money order for a year's subscription to my dad. I know each up-to-date copy he receives will tell him much more than I can. And what a grand time we'll have browsing through past copies together when it's over 'Over Here'."

Corp. W. B., U.S. Army

"The copies of LIFE which reach this station get so dog-eared one can hardly recognize them. They are snapped up as if they were hot off the presses and represent a little bit of home, transplanted ten thousand miles to us."

Ens. C. M., U.S. Navy

"Next to letters, nothing brings as much pleasure out here as my copies of LIFE. Each copy is eagerly sought by other members of this sector for it brings us all a real picture of things and people at home."

1st Lieut. D. W., U.S. Army

"We are on overseas service, in a very remote and uncomfortable station, where we get only a few scattered copies of LIFE. They are read so eagerly that only scattered rags remain. LIFE is a breath from home . . ."

Corp. H. McN., U.S. Army Air Forces

"In our estimation LIFE is tops. No better magazine can be found which supplies the truthful and most picturesque side of the news. Keep up the good work you have been doing—you have the men of the armed forces solidly behind you."

ARM 2/c H. B., U.S. Navy

WE'VE SEEN IT BEFORE... We'll see it Again!

1898

1917

During our half century of keeping store here on Pennsylvania Avenue, we've seen many a heroic march mirrored in our windows.

We were here in '99 to welcome Admiral Dewey. We still remember the great gold-laced figure . . . the fairy lamps . . . the proud escort of bicycles, their wheels interlaced with garlands.

Twenty years later, we hailed the AEF back from World War I. We saw the First Division pass on its way to the Peace Arch, led by Gen. Pershing, "his work gallantly and nobly done."

Today, Kann's looks ahead to the not distant time when triumphant heroes will again return. Through our windows, we shall see them come, aglow with the glory of Victory . . . marching under a flag re-sanctified by right . . . flanked by the banners of other nations united with us in freedom.

We shall be here then to lift our thankful voices. And it will be the golden day of all our golden years.

the Earle Theater, and an autograph-clubful of 13-year-old high school kids who hung around waiting for their idols' coming and signatures.

Despite contradictory claims, it has been established that no Warner's people were present Saturday night at Ole Olsen's birthday party in Club Bali. Olsen himself paid the chicken-dinner bill for the 200-odd guests, and if they wasted some expectations on Miss Davis' and Messrs. Garfield and O'Brien's arrival, it was "lots of fun."

The Warner Brothers office here had no knowledge of Smith's presence in Washington until Monday, according to an official statement yesterday by Frank La Falce, Warner's representaive here. The name, Warner, was obviously used by the alleged agent because it is reputable and would serve to throw suspicious persons of the trail, he explained.

With all the "conflicting stories," he said, it is almost impossible now to determine just who is trying not to be shown up as being on the "sucker list" of the imposter.

However, according to Lionel Kaye, one of the funnymen in "Sons o' Fun" at the National Theater, "I may have been the biggest sucker, next to the Statler. But this guy Smith certainly pulled the goods on Warners itself, and that proves how good he is."

Kaye, who says he "practically lived with the crook for three days" and moved into an expensive room at the Statler at Smith's invitation and, "I thought," expense, accompanied the man to the Earle Theater at 3:30 p. m. on Saturday, he relates, to meet Harry Anger, "personal representative for the Warner Brothers," and the theater manager.

"Anger and this Smith shook hands and talked together while the vaudeville show was on," Kaye declared, "and then Anger left and we went backstage to discuss with Joe Lombardi, the band leader, using the Earle's cast in a shot for "Capital Capers."

"That's how that guy fooled everybody. If he isn't working for Warner's, he should be. He's so dynamic, they're missing a good bet," suggested Kaye, who was out several hundred dollars and a movie contract for the picture by the time "dynamo" Smith disappeared.

While all this, plus the daily delivery of orchids from Smith—at the Statler's expense—to a "Sons o' Fun" actress, was going on, the Shubert company in New York, backers of the show at the National Theater, got wind of Smith's negotiations to sign up some 20 of the show's cast.

Down from New York came Harry Kauffman, the Shuberts' representative, to meet Smith at the Statler Sunday afternoon and talk over the attempted "steal" of the show's stars. But by the time he arrived at 4 p. m., Smith, of course, was gone, and Kauffman joined the Statler management, half a dozen night club owners, Olsen and Johnson, the 20 fledgling screen players from "Sons o' Fun," Warners' office here, and Miss Ann Marie Kurtz, 13-year-old president of the GSI ("secret name," she says) Autograph Club and its 12 members—holding their heads and wondering what had hit them.

"I knew he must be a phoney," Kaye said, "when I turned on the radio Sunday night at 7 o'clock and heard John Garfield broadcasting from Hollywood. And here we were waiting for him and Bette Davis in Washington. Me and a couple of hundred other suckers."

Although he disappeared to all his creditors sometime late Sunday afternoon, Smith was last seen a little after 8 p. m. Sunday when, according to Al Meyers, one of the "Three Pitchmen" in Sons o' Fun" and one of those offered a "movie contract," the swindler drove up to the National Theater, hopped out of his cab with an overcoat on his arm, dashed into the theater lobby for an instant, and then disappeared back into the waiting taxi and drove off.

Latest appraisals from the Statler management—not counting entertainment items, etc.—place their damage at $237.43 for Smith's suite, plus $625 for five checks cashed during his cyclonic stay.

Armistice Day

We know now poignantly enough that the anniversary we observe today was nothing more than what its name implies—an armistice, an interlude in the long war for human freedom. There will be many among us whose reverence today will be not only for that Unknown Soldier enshrined at Arlington but for some soldier known and loved and lost in the renewal of this war.

It may be that some of those who are bereft will find solace in the last letter written to his parents by Pvt. Sidney Robbins, age 21, of New York City, killed in action in North Africa. The significance of this Armistice Day is better expressed in his words than in any at our command.

> This is my last letter to you. I am keeping it in my pocket, and if I should be killed, I hope somebody will mail it to you.
> I used to say that I wanted to do something to help make the world better?
>
> Now I have the chance. If I die, at least I will know that I died to make the world a better place to live in.
> I'll die, not as a hero, but as an ordinary young man who did all he could to help overcome the forces of evil.
> I'm only worried about how sad you would be if I get killed, but I hope you will also be proud that your son gave his life for the greatest cause in the world—that men might be free.
> God bless you both.
> I'll always love you.
> Your devoted son, SIDNEY.

It is not given to many men to know why they die. To nearly all of us, of whatever age, death comes inopportunely. Perhaps it is only to those who lay down their lives of their own volition, with a sense of purpose, that death can bring the feeling of fulfillment. Yet this fulfillment can be realized only by us, the living—only by a consecration to the purpose of those who died which will transmute the day of armistice into a day of enduring peace.

Liquor Troubles

The repeal of our national prohibition laws came about because the American people eventually realized that legal suppression was not a cure for the evils of intemperance. The excesses of the miscalled "dry" era forced home the fact that our only choice lay between acceptance of a legalized, regulated liquor industry and an illegal one, with all its attendant social evils. Today the country is confronted by war conditions that are encouraging a return to the lawlessness of prohibition days.

While there is no ban on sales of tax-paid liquors, the acute shortage of whisky supplies caused by suspension of manufacture, plus heavy increases in excise taxes, has created a situation in which moonshining flourishes. During September, for instance, the Bureau of Internal Revenue reports the seizure of 140 stills in the District, Maryland, North Carolina and West Virginia compared with only 86 in the same month a year ago. However, moonshining is a perennial evil that has been with us since taxes were first imposed on distilled spirits. For decades Government agents have been engaged in tracking down and destroying hidden stills. But this war has brought with it a new problem of liquor "bootlegging" in the form of sales of tax-paid liquor in black markets above ceiling prices. Racketeers who might once have sold smuggled goods or disposed of "moonshine" are now doing a thriving business in this bootleg whisky. The effect of their practices is to further reduce the extremely scanty supplies of whisky available for sale through legitimate distributive channels.

What especially worries Government officials is the knowledge that these liquor gangs will not be content to quit when their present sources of supply are exhausted. They will undoubtedly turn their attention increasingly to "moonshine" products. The Bureau of Internal Revenue and the OPA as well as the Distilled Spirits Institute are investigating black market leakages, therefore, in the hope of breaking up gangster activities before they have become fully entrenched.

In view of the demoralizing effects of the existing dearth of whisky, the question may well be raised whether it would not be better to release some grain for the current manufacture of whisky. At least the WPB should put the arguments on record against any such release. After all, the amount of grain saved by banning whisky manufacture is a very small percentage of total output. Moreover, as an offset against this limited saving must be placed the amount of grain consumed in illicit manufacture, plus the loss of Federal revenue from legal liquor sales, and the expenditure of manpower in tracking down lawbreakers.

Naturally the growing lawlessness is grist to the mill of the prohibition groups that are waging a fight to make the country dry once more. This time their effort is directed—and with marked success—to extending the dry area by local option. Spokesmen for the legal industry point out that these local prohibition efforts constitute a growing threat and that the next step will be to try to increase the number of dry States. Meantime, the acute whisky shortage is creating difficulties for the so-called monopoly States where control boards have been struggling to build up their scanty supplies. The State of Washington has even gone so far as to begin negotiations for the purchase of a Kentucky distillery, following an unsuccessful effort by the Oregon Liquor Board to buy the same distillery. Thus the private legalized industry is threatened by repressive laws on the one hand, and by the encroachment of Government competition on the other.

Soldier Vote

It is not easy to enable soldiers to vote. With our armed forces distributed over nearly every portion of the planet, many of them isolated on remote islands of the Pacific, the sheer physical task of transporting and collecting ballots is formidable indeed. The expenditure of time, energy and shipping space involved could be justified for no other purpose. But whatever it costs in effort, it is well worth it to preserve for servicemen the prerogatives of their citizenship.

Past endeavors to afford voting opportunities to servicemen have been pathetically unsuccessful. In the congressional elections of last year, only 137,000 uniformed men applied for war ballots. And, when all the shouting was over, no more than 28,000 valid service ballots had been cast. The importance of the election to be held next year demands a far more effective enfranchisement of the men who have been called to the colors. They have a vital concern in the choice of a President in 1944 and in the selection of Senators and Representatives. To a greater extent, perhaps, than any other group of citizens, they are entitled to a voice in shaping the policies of the postwar period.

Legislation introduced in the House by Congressman Worley and in the upper chamber by Senator Green gives promise of making the franchise available to most, if not all, our men and women in uniform. It would establish a bipartisan United States war ballot commission to superintend the balloting. But it would leave the actual distribution, collection and return of ballots to the several branches of our military and naval establishment. And it would entrust the counting of votes, sensibly, to the Secretaries of State in the various States from which the voters hail.

The proposed system is not without shortcomings. It will be impossible to print the names of candidates on the ballots to be sent overseas. In some situations, even, lists of candidates may not be available for distribution among the men in time to acquaint them with all the nominees. But they will know at least who the presidential and vice presidential candidates are and will be able to register their choices for these quintessential offices. Very wisely the bills under consideration provide for as great a degree of informality in voting as is consistent with secrecy and accurate tabulation of the results.

Some of the niceties of State qualifications for voting would be done away with under this system. No man in uniform, for example, would have to pay a poll tax. Registration would be combined with balloting. This sort of simplification of election procedures which may be in effect at home should not be deplored. And it should by no means be seized upon as an excuse for obstructing or sabotaging this vital piece of legislation. The proposals which are now before Congress have been formulated in collaboration with a number of State Secretaries of State and meet all the reasonable requirements which they have raised.

Extension of the suffrage to servicemen will undoubtedly afford a big boost to their morale. It is one concrete, practical way of assuring them that their interests and aims are not being ignored or overriden at home. It will serve to narrow the breach which inevitably exists between them and civilians. And perhaps most important of all it will afford them a reminder of their responsibilities in the democratic form of society which they are fighting to preserve.

Economic War

Herbert Morrison, British Minister of Home Security, made a speech recently expressing the hope that the International Labor Office may be able to bring about minimum postwar wage levels in all countries. His suggestion seems utopian at this juncture. But it reminds us that the competition for world markets after this war is going to be keen, if not ruthless. The pressure to export, Mr. Morrison fears, is likely to lead to reduction of wages and exploitation of labor, especially in socially backward countries.

The competition of cheap labor has in the past provided the chief and the most persuasive argument in favor of protective tariffs. In the absence of any alternative plan for dealing with "that worst of all forms of competition," rising tariff barriers may once again frustrate hopes of postwar revival of international trade on a grand scale. Such a prospect is a cloud over present plans for future collaboration, yet it cannot be put aside unless the nations can devise some means of preventing worker living standards in progressive countries from being undermined by the importation of goods produced by underpaid labor.

Mr. Morrison's proposal is one way of obviating economic war. Its realization will be a stupendous task even if trading nations are willing to enter into an agreement to abide by ILO minimum wage standards. Nor is it the only answer to the problem. Complications growing out of the disordered state of world currencies have to be taken into account. From London, for instance, comes word that prominent members of the British Labor Party are hostile to any international stabilization plan that would link the pound to the dollar and to gold. They want their country to retain its freedom to devalue the pound, when and if necessary.

As we know from experience, currency devaluation provides a means of forcing exports upon other countries. It also lowers the exchange value of labor's products and consequently depresses living standards in the country manipulating the value of its currency in order to increase its competitive advantage in foreign markets. There would be little use in setting up minimum wage standards within trading countries, therefore, if those same countries were to engage in competitive devaluation of their currencies. If any large trading nation clings to its right to devalue at will, other nations will do likewise, and efforts to reestablish international trade upon a sound, competitive basis will accordingly be frustrated.

Giraud's Resignation

The latest reorganization of the Committee of National Liberation at Algiers, following the resignation from that body of General Honore Giraud, brings up this very logical question: Are the Department of State and the British Foreign Office now prepared to erase from the slate whatever remains of their ill-conceived and worse-managed French policy and to begin anew? The domination of the committee by General de Gaulle and his followers is now virtually complete. And a retrospect of the events of the past year makes it perfectly plain that General de Gaulle owes a great part of his present ascendancy among his own countrymen to the very policy whereby it apparently was intended to relegate him to obscurity and oblivion.

A very lucid explanation of just how this policy was worked to General de Gaulle's political advantage was given the other day by one of the recently escaped leaders of the French underground in an interview at London with Mr. Drew Middleton of the New York Times. Until a year ago, he said, De Gaulle was merely a symbol. He had provided a designation, but hardly more than that, for the various movements of resistance to the German conquerors. However, Gaullisme, which formerly signified merely resistance, any form of resistance, to Vichy and to the Nazis today means something much more definite. It means the idea of a free and sovereign France as opposed to the idea of a France dominated, however benevolently, by Britain and America.

Before the invasion of North Africa, German propaganda had attempted to persuade Frenchmen that General de Gaulle was a mere puppet of the British and Americans. Evidently this propaganda was not without some effect until the British and Americans reduced it to absurdity by their unaccountable slights to De Gaulle and their equally unaccountable patronage of General Giraud. By the very juxtaposition with General Giraud, De Gaulle began to emerge in the minds of Frenchmen as a definite personality, representing a definite cause. The growing distrust in France of Britain and America, as the result of the demonstration of Allied political ineptitude in North Africa, has enormously enhanced De Gaulle's personal popularity among Frenchmen and their willingness to accept his leadership. The man who was the symbol of opposition to collaboration with the Germans has become also the symbol of opposition to domination by the Western powers.

U-Boats

"We have broken the back of the U-boat war," said Winston Churchill in his Mansion House address last Tuesday. And by way of confirmation it was announced that very day that approximately 60 U-boats had been destroyed by the Allies during August, September and October. The total is 150 for six months. In other words, we are now sinking German submarines at a rate faster than Hitler can build them. Indeed, the situation from the German point of view is so disheartening that in his beer-hall anniversary speech this week the Fuehrer, though covering a lot of ground, was careful to avoid the subject.

The nearest Hitler came to it was when, speaking of what the Allies may do, he declared that "each new landing may force them to accumulate more shipping space." But he did not boast, this time, as German propagandists used to boast in the past, that this shipping would be destroyed en route by U-boats. In the Atlantic, in fact, the Allies have won a decisive and definitive victory.

Synthetic Rubber

A Communication

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has expressed the hope that, after the war, there will be no tariff imposed on crude rubber, for the purpose of affording protection to our present synthetic rubber industry. Such a hope is prompted, no doubt, by some ramification of the "good neighbor" spirit, rather than by any well thought out and long-range view of what is best for the United States.

For a generation previous to World War I we had protective tariffs, and many railed against them as encouraging monopolies and maintaining unduly high prices. Perhaps those tariff walls did enable some to pile up unwarranted profits, but the great industries which are today turning out the goods which mean the difference between success and failure for the Allies in their fight against totalitarianism would not have been in existence, or would not have had the sufficient facilities they now have, if, instead of giving thought to the building up of the industries of our own country the lawmakers of 20 to 40 years ago had been imbued with the "good neighbor" spirit to the exclusion of thoughts of what seemed best for the good old U. S. A.

Central America and South America ought to be given every encouragement to develop to their fullest extent the rubber potentialities of their lands. Those are the lands of which rubber producing trees are native, and excepting only the negligible rubber producing areas of Africa, the Americas to the south of us are the only countries with any inherent right to the crude rubber market of the world.

Brazilian Rubber

Once Brazil had a natural monopoly of the rubber market. The greatest amount of rubber ever produced in Brazil, when she had practically no competition, and when the price of rubber was around 10 times what it is today, was less than one-tenth of the normal needs of the United States alone before the present war.

Rubber-producing trees never grew in India, the Malay Peninsula and the East Indies until the English and Dutch who imposed their rule upon the peoples of those lands introduced them there. And always it was the English and the Dutch who owned the rubber industry, and who managed to dictate the price the world (meaning principally the United States) should pay for its product. If, after the present war is over, we are going to respect the right of peoples to govern themselves, the English and the Dutch will have no business in the Far East. The peoples of those countries have no vestige of a claim to any part of the world's rubber market. The only interest those peoples ever have had in the rubber industry was as a source of employment at pitifully low wages.

We have no information as to the present status of the rubber plantations of the Far East since they were overrun by the Japanese. It is safe to assume that much destruction took place immediately before and during the occupation of those countries by the enemy. It is also safe to assume that under the Japanese domination only a small fraction of the rubber plantations have been kept in good cultivation, as Japan has neither the facilities and knowledge for maintaining the plantations, nor the market or need for the great amount of rubber those plantations would yield when at their peak of production.

Furthermore, it is safe to assume that when the Japanese are forced to relinquish the rubber-producing countries they will complete the destruction so far as is possible. A short interval of neglect is all that is needed to work almost complete destruction. Anyone who has lived in the tropics knows how completely the jungle can take back its own in a single year, when cultivation is suspended.

Suitable Climate

So, as to the lands which, before this war, were supplying almost all of the world's rubber needs, when the war is over there will be nothing of much value except a soil and climate suitable for growing rubber trees. There will not be in those lands the capital, the experience nor the initiative to establish again the great plantations which once existed. The future of rubber for the next two decades may be calculated without the Far East as a factor.

There is no reason to assume that natural rubber, both wild and cultivated, from all possible rubber-producing countries can be brought to such a stage of development within 15 to 20 years after the war so that the world will need no other source of supply.

The United States ought to plan to keep its synthetic rubber industry active. Instead of using petroleum and grain alcohol as sources, rubber should be made from alcohol derived from many products now practically wasted — sawdust and waste lumber from our sawmills, cactus from the plains and deserts of our Southwest, blackstrap from our cane-sugar mills and those of the West Indies.

We know, and we can know, pretty definitely what we can do with out own crude rubber industry. We cannot know what we may be able to count on, in some future emergency, as to the rubber industry of other countries. Rubber has been proven to be too vital to the very life of our Nation for us to take any chances with our future needs.

A Cornered Rat

By Barnet Nover

Hitler, Germany And The War

AT LEAST SEVEN times in the course of his speech of last Monday, Hitler found it necessary to reassure the German people that what had happened in 1918 would not happen again.

This week marks the twenty-fifth anniversary both of the abdication of the Kaiser and the capitulation of Germany following her defeat in the last war. When he spoke, Hitler obviously had both of these anniversaries in mind.

"The present Germany," he said, "is a different state from the Germany of 1914-18." He, Hitler, is a different man from William of Hohenzollern and unlike the latter would not lose his nerve. And this time the leadership of the state does not consist, as it did then, of "weaklings who, instead of fighting as duty commanded to the last breath, followed the seemingly easier way of compromise and thus of submission."

THAT WAS THE MAJOR theme in that grim symphony of pleas, threats, prayers, promises and boasts which the Wagnerian Fuehrer played to his unhappy hearers this week.

There were several minor themes. Running throughout the speech there was the constantly repeated demand that the German people have faith in him, in the Nazi Party, in victory, and that they implement that faith with fanaticism and perseverance. There was also the dour warning that the regime was prepared to destroy those who lacked faith. "We shall not shrink," he said, "from bringing other people to terms who are not ready to make these sacrifices . . . We shall not shrink from putting to death without much ado a few hundred criminals at home."

And, finally, there cropped up from time to time in Hitler's speech the unconscious admission that he was aware that his efforts might fail and, therefore, the urge to place the blame for Germany's ultimate defeat on other shoulders.

"If my own people," he said, "would be broken by such a trial I could not shed any tears about it. It would not have deserved anything else and it would be its own fate for which it would only have itself to blame."

HITLER'S SPEECH followed a speech by Marshal Stalin and was followed by speeches by Prime Minister Winston Churchill and President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

These four pronouncements, each in their own way and all together reveal the distance we have traveled, the course we yet have to traverse, the ultimate end.

Hitler's speech reflected the attitude of a man who having defied Providence calls upon it to save him. The speeches of Stalin, Churchill and Roosevelt were the confident expressions of leaders who know that while victory may be postponed it is on the way and who, therefore, and this was particularly true of the President's address, can afford to look beyond victory.

FOR AN ENTIRE YEAR the lot of the German people has consisted of nothing but defeat—defeat in Africa, in Sicily, in Russia, in Italy; defeat at sea and defeat in the air.

The best that Hitler can promise them is that in ways he cannot specify, by methods he cannot describe, Germany will win. The road to victory for the Allies is merely an extension of the road they have been traveling and are now traveling with increasing vigor and unity.

The various more or less isolated campaigns fought by the Allies up to now are now merging into one campaign. But Hitler finds it necessary at this time to fight not one war but two—a war abroad and a war at home and the only place where he still possesses offensive power is in Germany itself.

Churchill's words are worth bearing in mind:

"For Herr Hitler and his guilty confederates know that their lives are at stake and that they, at any rate, run no extra risk in making other people fight on to the bitter end."

Germany was the first country that Hitler succeeded in conquering. Now, after more than ten years in which Germany's frontiers were extended in every direction, Hitler finds it necessary to reconquer the Reich.

But even if he succeeds, that will not save him. His sands are running out.

At best the Third Reich has another year before its course is run; its doom is likely to be sounded well before the next anniversary of the Armistice of 1918. And when the collapse comes it will come not gradually, like the melting of snow, but suddenly like an avalanche. For this, too, we must be prepared.

Negotiated Peace

There are many Americans who, in hoping to let the German people dodge their responsibility, mean for various reasons to dodge their own. They advocate a negotiated peace. They are for winning over the Germans by feeding them more abundantly and promptly than the victims of their conquests whose food they stole. Some are well-intentioned people who think you can win friends and influence people by a combination of oversight and lavishness. Others, with kin in Germany, would lessen the blows of her defeat and retribution. Still others would be "practical": dish it out fast and plentifully, and the wild dog is bound to lick your hands; get the postwar mess over with quickly so we can forget about it and get back to our own affairs.

The fact is we are faced by a very tough problem in the psychology of the German people. Trying to buy their friendship would make them contemptuous; partitioning their land would heighten their sense of frustration, egomania, servility, martyrdom. Both methods would only lead to another blow-up.

The Germans believe that the "master race" has a destiny and that even if they fail militarily in this war the world will eventually be theirs. Young Nazis are being taught in detail exactly what to do in case their party is forced underground. The Hitlerian illusion will not be easily splintered, not even by defeat and "unconditional surrender." Germany probably can't be regenerated in less than two generations, and it will not be cured at all with surface understanding, sloppy generosity. Past indifference and negligence now cost us dear. Now we need tough-minded wisdom and courage to be ruthless where necessary.

On October 20, 1941, the German commander at Kraguyevats, Serbia, a Colonel Zimmermann, ordered his regiment, which obeyed him, to mow down with machine guns 4672 civilian Serbian boys and men between the ages of 15 and 50 in retaliation for 10 German killed and 26 wounded by guerillas. Shall we let Zimmermann go scot-free or what shall we do with him? And if we do something with him, will that be doing anything at all? How about the men who obeyed his order? Shall we hold them responsible? Shall we hold Hitler responsible? Who is responsible for Hitler? The German people? . . .

This is the mere beginning of the questions we will have to answer and act on.

Coloring Margarine

Your editorial upon the humble subject of margarine was appreciated. The official margarine colorer of any family will heartily agree with you. Some relief is long overdue, in the interest of Nation or unanimity. It's time to drop the trifling issue whether it's colored at home or commercially as it should be. HANK BREEN.

Recent Elections

One wonders what lies back of the recent elections.

It surely cannot be based upon the Administration's foreign policy, which has been so outstanding. One would imagine that the public's reaction to this great accomplishment would show appreciation and indorsement by votes.

Isn't it possible that we could visualize what would have happened to inflation if the Government had not, in our own protection, developed certain limitations such as OPA, rationing, etc.?

Isn't it possible that the public is being misled by those who blame the Administration for its very accomplishments? If these restrictions were not in effect, we would be in a period of spiral inflation that would put to shame the high prices and the shortages which were in effect during the previous World War.

Is it possible that the average person fails to realize the difference between an all-out effort and a half-hearted effort, such as we had during the last war?

One wonders whether in a democracy such as ours if we are willing to weigh carefully the sacrifices that are necessary on the one hand and to see clearly on the other the necessity of making rules and regulations, which in themselves seem unnecessary, but which in fact are vital and beneficial to our own security and future.

Fair Employment

Your consistent support of the Fair Employment Practice Committee is one of the most salutary developments in efforts to establish the Four Freedoms on the home front. Your clear, forthright editorials indorsing the work of the committee stand in marked contrast to the oblivion to which some editors have consigned it.

The FEPC faces many difficulties. It is attempting to carry on in a field of action largely neglected by the Federal Government since the post-Civil War period. It is confronted with all the prejudices which a laissez faire policy has permitted to develop and crystallize into traditions. Yet, in spite of these handicaps, the committee has done much to effect more democratic utilization of the war manpower resources of the United States. It can do even more as long as it has your active support and that of other enlightened and fair-minded Americans.

Wake Up, Washington!

We farmers were under the impression that John L. Lewis ruled only a few men in Washington. It now appears that he rules the universe and all the stars.

Wake up, Washington! Our sons are fighting for their lives and our security across the seas. We have been fighting a one-sided home-front fight here long enough.

Indian Leader

By Paul Winkler

German Agent

IT WOULDN'T be advisable to dismiss the naming of Subhas Chandra Bose, president of the India Independence League of Singapore, as head of the Japanese-sponsored "Provisional Government of Free India" as an unimportant manipulation of a mere puppet. The creation of the "provisional government," although it has nothing to govern, with Bose at its head, could have its repurcussions within India. The case is entirely different from the naming of Jose P. Laurel as head of the government in the Philippines. Laurel is a nonentity without a following. Bose is not.

You can't dismiss lightly the influence of a man who has twice been elected president of India's National Congress Party, the largest in that country. A high caste Hindu himself, Bose has a considerable following among Hindus in India. If Britain had succeeded in composing her difficulties with the Indians through the Cripps mission, the fact that Bose is with the Japanese would probably matter little. But since she did not, and since there are Indian independence leaders who agree with Bose on the point on which he broke with Gandhi—the necessity for using stronger measures than nonviolence—he may be able to provide a real contribution to the Japanese cause by inciting anti-British acts within India by nationalists who cherish the naive idea that autocratic Japan is more likely to grant them independence than democratic Britain.

Fight for Independence

Bose spent a good deal of time inside of Indian prisons, during the days of his fight for independence at home. But Britain was not his only enemy. He combated Gandhi as well, whom he called "weak-kneed." He reproached the Mahatma for wasting his energies in favor of such pet ideas as prohibition and handicrafts, which diverted attention from the main objective—Indian independence. His resignation from the presidency of the National Congress Party in April, 1939, was the result of a dispute with Gandhi over nonviolence.

During one of his voluntary exiles from India in 1933, Bose made the first contacts with the Fascist dictators which were later to place him in his present curious position of a fighter for freedom allied with the fighters against freedom. He established his headquarters in Vienna and from that vantage point got in touch with Mussolini and Hitler. Simultaneously, he declared that it was his opinion that Gandhi had failed as a political leader. "It is futile to expect," he said "that we can ever bring about a change of heart in our rulers simply through our own sufferings, or by trying to love them. Noncooperation cannot be given up, but the form of noncooperation will have to become more militant, and the fight for freedom must be waged on all fronts."

The "Bureau for Asia" of the Wilhelmstrasse noted these words, and realized the usefulness of the man who uttered them.

A man who wanted to use violent methods against the British Empire fitted perfectly into German plans.

"Forward Bloc"

The Germans encouraged Bose to make plans for an underground organization in India, which was later given the name of the "Forward Bloc." Bose's original idea was to stay in Vienna, and work from there, but the Germans convinced him that he could be more effective if he returned to India. Before he returned, he called on Mussolini in Rome, and commented, "In my opinion, fascism is a system which shows what can be accomplished by victorious action and unity."

With this odd opinion for a fighter for freedom, Bose went back to India, and made great headway through the combination of foreign subsidy, native ability and acquired education.

For some time his whereabouts was a mystery. He was rumored to have been seen in Berlin, but no one was sure of it. Then, in March, 1942, the Italian radio announced that he had been killed in a plane crash while on his way to Japan to form there an independent Indian government.

That report seems to have been put out purposely, false though it was, as a trial balloon. The Axis was trying to find out whether Bose actually had enough influence in India to make him useful. It found out. His death was mourned publicly in India, and many Indian leaders, including some of those who had opposed him, Ghandi among them, paid tribute to him. His name, it appeared, did still have value in India. So half, at least, of the trial balloon was made the truth. The falsity of the death report was revealed. The prediction of the formation of an "independent" Indian government under Japan's aegis was confirmed by its actual establishment.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

German Strategy And European Order

THE QUESTION is why the German army fights as well as it is fighting, now that its commanders know that defeat is certain and there is no chance whatever of a military stalemate and a negotiated peace.

LIPPMANN

HITLER'S LATEST speech may be read with this question in our minds. We find Hitler declaring that he and the Nazi party will fight to the death, and that they will behead any number of Germans who do not help them. There is no doubt that Hitler means what he says. For Hitler will die when the German army stops fighting; Hitler cannot even surrender unconditionally and escape death. For if the United Nations do not execute him, which they will if they can lay their hands on him, the Germans are bound to kill him. For that is the only way they can release themselves from their personal oath to the Fuehrer and thus become able to surrender to the Allies.

Why then do they not kill him now and surrender before the other great cities of Germany are devastated and before Germany itself is invaded? This question must have been pondered deeply by the German generals ever since the tide turned decisively against them this past summer. They know perfectly well that the more they retreat in Russia and in Italy, the harder it becomes to defend Germany itself from the air attack. Therefore they cannot be shortening their lines, as generals might have done before the advent of air power, in order to strengthen a concentrated defense of Germany. In modern war no nation can defend itself on its own frontier.

A VERY POSSIBLE, and indeed probable, explanation of the German strategy is that they do not dare to surrender their armies before they get them back home. If they did, such is the implacable hatred they have aroused among the occupied peoples, they might be massacred in Russia, Poland, the Balkans, Italy, France, Norway, and the Low Countries. On the other hand, if they can disengage themselves and withdraw within the old frontiers of the Reich, they could expect protection from the Allied armies when they surrender.

This may not be the correct explanation but, if we assume as we must that the German officers are professional soldiers who think realistically about the German army, it is a rational explanation. It is a good reason why the German army goes on fighting. It takes account also of Mr. Churchill's warning that England may still be attacked in a way which, while it will not "affect the final course of the war," may "call for the utmost efficiency and devotion in our firewatchers and home guards." If the Germans are now fighting the most gigantic rearguard action in military history for the purpose of getting the bulk of their troops back home before they surrender, then a counterattack on England to delay the invasion from England may well be part of their plan.

IT IS CLEAR that the German army is no longer fighting for Germany but for itself. The German troops who are not killed in battle may, by this rearguard action, survive the war. But while the survivors stand to gain, the German nation stands to lose by every month that the war is now prolonged. The air bombardment will reach a scale of violence in the coming months which may well inflict irreparable damage upon the German economy. Moreover, if what the retreating German armies have done in Kiev and in Naples is a sample of what they intend to do everywhere else, then the justice which Europe will mete out to Germany will not for a long time be tempered with much mercy.

The Germans are in the appalling dilemma where if they try to save their army from an absolute catastrophe they will commit new horrors, as they withdraw it, for which the German nation will inevitably have to suffer the consequences.

UNITED NATIONS plans now in the making are certain to be profoundly affected by the length of the war and by the kind of devastation which the retreating German armies leave behind them. It is, therefore, supremely important to develop further the great achievement of the Moscow Conference when it established the means for combined action by the great powers. The necessary next phase is to do all that can be done now to make it possible for the liberated nations to set up effective governmental authority when the Germans leave. Britain, Russia, and the United States will have to govern the wreck that was the German Reich and perhaps the remains of the Axis satellite states. But it is imperative that they should be spared the need to govern Allied territory, and indeed that the Allied European states should play their part in restoring order in Europe.

For this reason wisdom in dealing with France is critically imperative now. To avoid civil disorder in liberated France, to be able to count upon the rapid establishment of a strong, democratic, and friendly French government, is the one and only sure way to make all of western Europe underwrite what was achieved and planned at Moscow. And if western Europe is secure for a good settlement, the prospects in central and eastern Europe will be immensely more favorable.

THE LATEST news from Algiers—if we do not misunderstand it and act unwisely—is reassuring. This may astonish those who continue to misinform themselves about French affairs by thinking that what is at stake is a personal contest between General de Gaulle and General Giraud. They should note that the changes at Algiers occurred at the precise moment when Mr. Churchill was saying in London: "I rejoice with every increase of unity and consolidation that I notice in the French National Committee at Algiers." The changes at Algiers, which have just been carried out, have been anticipated for some time by those who are well informed, and Mr. Churchill is very well informed.

There is no contest between General de Gaulle and General Giraud because General Giraud has no political following in France, whereas General de Gaulle's following is now greater than it has ever been. But that does not mean that General de Gaulle is moving towards a personal dictatorship. On the contrary, the signs are clear and increasingly positive that his personal power is contained within French republican traditions and institutions. It is very republican and very French that General Giraud, as commander in chief of the armies, should hold no political office and should be placed under civilian authority. It is equally republican and French that the committee should now have been made to include members of the resistance in France and also of the French parliament. The National Committee today is more democratic and more representative than it has ever been before.

IN THIS development, which we ought to encourage, lies our best hope of an orderly liberation of western Europe.

Sales Tax Held Least Painful Levy for Poor

By Gustav Stolper

Former liberal member of the German Reichstag for Hamburg, serving as a member of both the Budget and Tax Committees (until advent of Hitler); former publisher and editor of the "German Economist" in Berlin, and Berlin correspondent of the London "Economist;" former Professor of Political Economy, Vienna; since 1933, living in New York as Consulting Economist; American citizen; author of "German Economy 1870-1940," "This Age of Fable," etc.

In the fifth year of World War II and after almost two years of American fighting, the administration and strong forces in Congress still try to achieve the impossible: to combat inflation and yet leave the hugely increased income and consumption of the masses intact.

This is like an attempt at mixing fire and water. We all have to reduce our standards and nobody can be exempted. The only choice left is whether the reduction will be achieved by the orderly process of reasonable taxation or by the disorderly process of inflation.

All our care for the underprivileged cannot undo the cruel consequences of the war. Even at the price of the complete annihilation of our wealthy and middle classes we cannot save the poor from contributing their part. The inescapable and least painful way to organize this contribution is a sales tax.

The sales tax is no cure-all. But it is an indispensable supplement to a steeply graduated income tax and a necessary part in a larger system of indirect taxation which the fiscal policy of this country has in the last few years permitted to degenerate, just when it should have been expanded and invigorated.

Indirect taxation has never, in modern times, had its adequate place in the American fiscal system. Yet we ought to remember that in the last prewar year, 1938-39, out of a total internal revenue of 5162 million dollars, excise taxes and customs contributed over 33 per cent. In the current fiscal year they are budgeted to contribute 4.1 million dollars of a total of over 40 billion dollars—only 10 per cent!

It is apposite to remember what has happened at the same time in Great Britain. For the British tax policy, rooted in old tradition, which rightly has been regarded as exemplary, it was a rough rule of the thumb to maintain direct and indirect taxation at about the ratio of 1 to 1. Excise taxes and customs were, so to say, the solid and reliable basis, subject to minor fluctuations, for the daily household of the government.

The function of direct taxes was to modify the impact of excise taxes in the direction of effective equilization of individual incomes and social redistribution of the national income, so that the well-to-do paid their share to the ever-expanding social service of the community. Since the outbreak of the war, with all but confiscatory surtaxes an da 100-per-cent excess-profits tax, receipts have developed as follows:

	Direct taxation (per cent of total)	Indirect taxation (per cent of total)
1938-39	55.6	44.4
1940-41	57.3	42.7
1942-43	63.0	37.0
1943-44	64.0	36.0

Even More Striking

Compare these figures with the 10 per cent in the American budget. The differences are even more striking if we go into detail, particularly in the case of liquor and tobacco. In 1938-39 alcoholic beverages were taxed in Britain at 106 million pounds, which, at the then prevailing exchange rate, was equivalent to 515 million dollars. Since the population of the United Kingdom is, roughly, one-third of the American, that figure would have been the equivalent of an American tax revenue of more than 1500 million dollars.

The actual yield of American liquor taxes in the corresponding fiscal year was less than 588 million dollars, little more than one-third of the British per capita figure. Tobacco taxes in 1938-39 brought in the equivalent of 412 million dollars in Britain. Again, with the American population, roughly, three times the English, this would have been the equivalent of 1250 million dollars. Actually, American tobacco taxes in 1938-39 yielded 518 million dollars.

In the current fiscal year 1943-44, with sharply restricted consumption of both liquor and tobacco in Britain, alcohol taxes are expected to supply the British Treasury with 326 million pounds, which, at the current rate of exchange, would be, roughly, 1300 million dollars.

Applied to the American population, this is the equivalent of about four billion dollars in the United States against a budgeted figure of less than 1300 million dollars. The corresponding figure in the British budget for tobacco taxes is even larger, i. e., 383 million pounds, or over 1500 million dollars. This would mean another 4.5 billion dollars in the United States against less than one billion dollars provided for in the 1943-44 budget. In other words, by English standards, liquor and tobacco alone would need to be taxed 8.5 billion dollars in America. And even this, fantastic as it sounds, is not the whole story, because the actual purchasing power of the dollar compared with the pound sterling is much smaller than the exchange rate indicates.

Gains New Prominence

I am aware of the traditional arguments proffered against raising American taxes on "optional consumption" (to use a customary British term) to British standards. I am equally aware of the political power of regional interests. But just because it is politically impossible in this country to raise special excise taxes to the British level (which in itself would be as justified and needed here as there), the sales tax moves into an even more prominent position.

Public discussion has gradually narrowed down the argument about the sales tax. The question no longer concerns the merits of this particular tax, but whether certain strata of the population should or should not contribute to the battle against inflation, although obviously the lowest income groups would be the victims hardest hit by an uncontrollable price explosion. At this point the debate about the sales tax ceases to be rational.

If politically powerful interests insist on a tax policy which will concentrate the whole tax burden on a small portion of the people and leave the rest free to spend their enormously increased income, they will not be persuaded by economic reasoning.

But if you ask the worker's wife weather she prefers a cut in the weekly pay check through an increased income tax or a sales tax which might reduce the purchasing power of the intact pay check by the same amount, there is little doubt that her preference will be for the sales tax and against an increased income tax, for the simple reason that it leaves her free—and this freedom is very real, not theoretical—to avoid the impact of the tax by thrift and economy.

It is simply not true, whatever Treasury statistics may assert to the contrary, that at a time of full employment any considerable part of the American people lives at a bare subsistence level. All evidence refutes such an assertion. The exceptional cases of destitution can and must be taken care of by other means than tax policy. They should certainly not be permitted to shackle the American tax policy to the detriment of the vast majority of the people.

For this very reason exemptions from the sales tax are not defensible. If we had the leisure to build up a refined, differentiated system of sales taxes, a great deal could be said in favor of a more complicated system than a general retail sales tax. (The merits of the Austrian system have rightly been emphasized in the discussion.)

There is no time for such experiments in the emergency of the probably last phases of the war. But it matters little whether food is more urgent than toothpaste. The sales tax on food need not impair the consumption of food, but it may, and should in case of limited incomes, impair the purchase of, say, certain cosmetics or other "optional" consumer goods.

And this, the restriction and curtailment of consumption rather than the raising of money for the Treasury, is the very purpose of the sales tax as of all excises under the particular conditions of a war economy.

Halifax Sees Germ Of New World In British Empire

New York, Nov. 10 (INS).—British Ambassador Lord Halifax declared tonight that "the germ of a new kind of relationship" among nations in the postwar world may lie in the system of association between Britain and her Dominions.

In an address before the Academy of Political Science, Lord Halifax traced the growth of the British Empire up to the point where the British Dominions in 1931 were given, under the Statute of Westminster, "that independence which they had long enjoyed in fact."

"I have described it as a declaration of independence," he said, "but it was also a declaration of interdependence. And there may lie the germ of a new kind of relationship."

'Tired to Death'

Irate Ickes Blasts House On Inquiries

By the Associated Press

Secretary Harold L. Ickes, battling "Curmudgeon" of the New Deal, went to the mat with Congress yesterday by telling a House committee to its face that he was "tired to death of useless and fruitless committees of investigation."

The trigger-tempered Interior Secretary unloosed his denunciation at a hearing of the case of Dr. Robert Morss Lovett, Virgin Islands official. Congress has ordered Lovett cut off the payroll November 15 because an appropriations subcommittee accused him of associating with "Communist-front" organizations.

Ickes told the Insula Affairs Committee, conducting yesterday's hearing, that Lovett would stay in Government employ without pay and would meanwhile fight in the courts to recover his salary on the grounds that the congressional order was unconstitutional.

Grilled More Than an Hour

The committee grilled Ickes for more than an hour, and at one point Representative Gross (Republican) of Pennsylvania broke in to request that all Federal employes in the room rise and be counted. (Gross said later that he made the request because Ickes "had so many assistants answering us.")

This proved the last straw for Ickes, who has described himself as a "Curmudgeon" in his autobiography. Red-faced and scowling, he stood up along with five Interior Department employes and declared:

"And may I add that we are tired to death of wasting public funds and public time in appearing before useless and fruitless committees of investigation."

Bitter feeling between Ickes and some committee members, long at odds regarding administration of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, flared at other points in the hearing.

Representative Cole (Republican) of New York inquired why the Interior Department was "so solicitous of Congress when funds are concerned, but so hostile at other times."

Calls Rider Unconstitutional

Ickes replied "we are not solicitous of Congress when we think it is contravening the Constitution and encroaching on our powers. . . . I don't have to respect any act of Congress which violates the Constitution."

Earlier, Ickes had read a statement in which he called "un-American and unconstitutional" the rider which Congress attached to an appropriations bill last June banning use of Federal funds to pay Dr. Lovett.

Ickes said he recently had named Lovett executive assistant to the Governor of the Virgin Islands in order to provide a court test of Congress' action. Previously, Lovett had held a similar position but with a different title.

"I am surprised at any member of Congress taking exception to this matter going to its proper place, the courts," Ickes told Representative Gibson (Democrat) of Georgia.

"I am not taking exception to that," Gibson replied. "I am taking exception to you taking the bull by the horns and interpreting the Constitution yourself."

More Production for Civilians Promised Congress by Nelson

Congress received assurance yesterday from Donald M. Nelson that production of essential civilian goods will be permitted on an increasing scale as fast as military requirements allow the release of war plants and vital materials.

The War Production Board chairman told a Senate Military Subcommittee that prime consideration would be given to civilian needs for transportation equipment, farm machinery and tools, washing machines, refrigerators and other household essentials.

In order to meet war and civilian needs, he declared, it is essential that production of copper, lead, steel, zinc and other metals be "kept going at peak."

Nelson praised plans of the subcommittee headed by Senator Murray (Democrat) of Montana to draft legislation to expedite settlements with war contractors who have finished their tasks.

"This is not merely a postwar problem," he emphasized, "More contracts have been canceled to date than were canceled after the last war."

While plants or materials released by one military agency have been transferred largely to other military agencies, Nelson said, the time is approaching when "more and more can be released for essential civilian production."

Meantime, he said it was imperative to provide a uniform procedure for cancelation of contracts to guide Federal procurement agencies and to protect industry from unnecessary delays in collecting for its work.

Bernard M. Baruch, he said, had already started meetings with procurement officials looking to a solution to the roblems of contract termination, reconversion of plants to civilian production and removal of Government equipment.

Direct Government loans may be advisable to provide working funds for subcontractors whose contracts have been canceled, the WPB chief asserted.

Meanwhile, the first comprehensive survey of war contracts by the Office of War Information disclosed that arms commitments are being redrawn wherever practicable to provide a financial incentive to contractors, end labor hoarding and to reduce costs.

The OWI based its survey on reports to James F. Byrnes, director of war mobilization, from the War and Navy Departments and the Maritime Commission on the current status of their contracts.

The agencies reported that redrafting of cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts, the type generally used in the initial stages of the rearmament program, had resulted in marked reduction in unit costs of many types of war goods.

James Forrestal, Undersecretary of the Navy, reported that the Navy's first conversion from a cost-plus to an incentive contract brought a reduction of the unit cost of one instrument from $195 to $146.

Another Filibuster Brewing to Kill Antipoll Tax Bill

A year-end Senate filibuster against the House-passed anti-poll-tax bill, repeating last year's bitter Southern fight to kill the legislation, started shaping up in the Senate yesterday.

Fifteen Southern Senators met with Senator Tom Connally (Democrat) of Texas, leader of the poll-tax State forces, to discuss ways and means of preventing action this session.

Chairman Frederick Van Nuys of the Senate Judiciary Committee meanwhile told newsmen he will attempt to report the bill to the Senate tomorrow.

"If we can get it to a vote, the committee has plenty of votes to report it," Van Nuys told newsmen. "After the committee acts, it is in the hands of the leadership. Any member of the Senate can move to call it up."

60% to Get Television In 5 Years After War

New York, Nov. 10 (AP).—Looking to postwar television, Thomas F. Joyce of the Radio Corp. of America declared tonight that within five years after resumption of commercial programs, visual radio shoulld be available to 60 per cent of the people. This, he added, would be possible through a network of stations in 157 key cities.

Democracy Declared China's Aim

Chungking, Nov. 10 (AP).—The intention of the government to establish a constitutional rule as soon as possible after the war was stated today by Liang Han-chao, minister of information, in answer to what he termed skepticism about China's becoming a democracy.

Pointing out that the committee for promoting the realization of constitutional government would hold its first general meeting Saturday and would seek to effect a new districting system designed to carry representation down to the basic family unit, Liang said "some Westerners" have misunderstood China's real situation.

Despite the handicaps of war, the government is striving to prepare the people for a constitutional regime, Liang said, citing a resolution last September by the Central Executive Committee of the Kuomintang calling for a national convention within a year after the end of the war to adopt a constitution and decide on a date for its enforcement.

He said this move followed a proposal by President Chiang Kai-shek to the people's political council for establishment of the committee for promoting realization of constitutional government.

Liang announced that all minority parties, including the Communists, were represented at a recent preparatory session of the committee.

Lecture on Law Set for Tomorrow

The second in a series of 15 lectures arranged by the faculty of the School of Canon Law, Catholic University, will be delivered at 8 p. m. tomorrow in St. Thomas More Library at the university.

Willibold Ploechl, JUD, visiting professor of Oriental canon law, will speak on the subject "Natural Law in the Code of Canon Law."

'Princess O'Rourke' Finds Love in a Sleeping Pill!

THE EFFICACIOUS EFFECTS of an overdose of sleeping pills on imperialism and an affair of the heart are amusingly celebrated in "Princess O'Rourke," which moves itself up a day to open this morning on the screen at the Earle Theater.

Had it not been for the dosage administered to Princess Maria by herself, a commercial airplane pilot, his copilot, the stewardess and a helpful counterman at a lunchwagon, there would have been no picture. There would not have been too much, anyway, had not the Warner Brothers had the temerity to move their fable into the White House for its climactic sequences, and avail themselves of the nearby presence of an unseen President, a justice of the Supreme Court, a high functionary of the State Department, the Secret Service and Fala, the Scottie—presumably with the sanction of all concerned.

The Princess Maria, you should know, is visiting the United States, as guest of the Government, with an extremely practical uncle who, nevertheless, still is all bound 'round with royal tradition. When her plane is grounded en route to a prospective visit in California, to escape the boredom of unwanted regal suitors, the Princess is thrown into the protective custody of the plane crew and given the eye-opening benefits of a salutary lesson in democracy.

The whole sprightly affair is conducted with agreeable finesse, a lively play of humor and not too much disrespect to royal prerogatives.

The pattern of the play is familiar from long usage as a source of light drama dependent upon social contrasts and divergent viewpoints for its interest and fun. It had been utilized with especial deftness in this case, perhaps because Norman Krasna both authored the script and directed the picture. It is conceivable that under other auspices the tale might have been injuriously manhandled in the thought that some of the sequences fly too daringly in the face of precedent. It is, for example, a shade unusual for the President of the United States to act the role of Cupid, with Fala for his Mercury. But that is what Mr. Krasna brings about, after having routed a dignified Supreme Court Justice out of his bed to perform a marriage ceremony in pajamas and bathrobe! Balancing these impudent episodes are those in the daily haunts of the airplane crew, from whom Princess Maria learns at first hand the delights of personal freedom as practiced by the casual citizen not hampered by title. A nice idea, nicely executed.

Cast Lends Story Credence

Mr. Krasna and the Warners have been particularly happy in their casting. Olivia De Havilland, by her great personal charm, quiet sense of humor and engaging embodiment of one born to the purple, lends the developments a plausibility they would not otherwise possess. Charles Coburn, as the uncle, is assigned a part in which he refuses to permit dignity to dull the amusement of a shrewdly gauged characterization. On the side of the commoners, Robert Cummings, costarred with Miss De Havilland, Jack Carson and Jane Wyman, up to their eyes in the flying game, provide much of the point of the story by the homely skill of their portrayals. Among others worthy of attention are Harry Davenport, as the harried jurist; Minor Watson, the diplomatist from the State Department, Curt Bois, who makes clear the reasons for the Princess indifference to titled wooers; Edward Gargan, Ray Walker, the G-man and many more.

On the stage, beginning this morning, the Earle patron will encounter "George Gershwin in Revue," one of Harry Anger's cagier productions, making effective use of a considerable number of the late George Gershwin's most popular compositions. These will be intrusted in large measure to Helene and her violin, Pat and Sylvia, duettists of the first order; the soaring Eileen Ritter and the Roxyettes in a Gershwin ballet, with eight lifelike ponies. Sharing headline prominence on the bill will be Paul Remos and His Toy Boys, in their familar demonstration of the versatility of two Lilliputians and their muscular mentor. Taking into account the Anger penchant for spectacular staging, this all should add up to a de luxe diversion. If it doesn't, we will let you know later. "Princess O'Rourke" we have already seen—long since.

The usual screen auxiliaries and the contributions of Jo Lombardi and his orchestra will augment a program that should make Armistice week memorable.

College and Film Careers Combined

Hollywood—Education will take precedence over acting for 18-year-old Joy Page when she ends her role as James Craig's leading lady in "Kismet," Technicolor spectacle starring Ronald Colman.

Although she still has many scenes to play, Joy recently enrolled at the University of Southern California as a special student for the term starting November 1. Daughter of Mrs. Jack Warner, Joy already has completed one year at USC. She is majoring in philosophy.

Studio Cat Family Makes Film Debut

Hollywood—The large family of studio cats at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have definitely gone to the dogs.

They played their first film scene in a sequence for "Gaslight," costarring Ingrid Bergman, Charles Boyer and Joseph Cotten. When felines were needed in a hurry, someone suggested this amazing cat family which, during its prolific generations, have been fed and coddled by every star on the lot.

Epic of Russia

"The Battle of Russia," opening this morning on the screen at Loew's Columbia Theater, is as stupendous a thing as the war has produced.

Assembled by Col. Anatole Litvak from films previously made, the picture possesses remarkable homogeneity and unfolds a tremendously moving story that is as mighty in action as it is horrifying in some of its more gruesome details.

Made originally as an orientation film for the exclusive scrutiny of the armed forces, "The Battle of Russia" is something that every American should see to his fuller knowledge of the nature of the enemy.

The film opens informatively, but not placidly, with earlier invasions of the country that occupies a sixth of the land surface of the globe, beginning with the German Knights in 1242, and including the attempted conquests by Sweden and Napoleon. The enormous dimensions of the country, its richness in natural resources, its polyglot population and multiplicity of languages—all welded into an unconquerable national entity—are made interestingly clear before the picture launches itself on its three great waves of action.

Of these, the first covers the first seven months of the present Nazi onslaught; the second, the siege of Leningrad, and the third the epic story of Stalingrad's heroic defense.

Valor vs. Barbarism

In each of these the valor of the Russian people is silhouetted against the barbarism of the Hun. To detail the episodes so skillfully woven into a grim and gripping continuity would be to write a history. That is what "The Battle of Russia" does with inspired condensation.

The glorious fortitude of Leningrad and the indomitable spirit that saved the shambles that was Stalingrad illuminate chapters of Russian history that no one will be able to forget.

"The Battle of Russia," however, does not confine itself to the fighting fronts. It goes equally into the devotion of all the people to the common cause, whether in the factories, in the homes or in the fields. It is in short, the complete definition of "all-out war."

The supplementary features of the new bill at the Columbia will be found a little less harrowing than the major attraction. One of the FitzPatrick Traveltalks in color will lead the spectator on a picturesque journey "Through the Colorado Rockies"; the fountainhead of laughter will be "The Lonesome Mouse," a color cartoon comedy, and the picturized news events will complete the program. LEONARD LYONS

New York, Nov. 10.—The agreements at the Moscow Conference were expedited by a remarkable episode: Molotov submitted a calendar to Hull and said: "Before we discuss boundaries here is a calendar. Please circle the date on which a second front will be opened." Mr. Hull circled the date . . . More than one million dollars already has been netted by the private sale of J. P. Morgan's paintings, in advance of the public auction . . . The late Sir Harry Oakes, incidentally, bought one of Morgan's Vermeer paintings for $230,000 . . . Senator Bone of Washington had a successful operation at the Mayo Clinic, and returns to the Capitol shortly.

CORDELL HULL

A constitutional amendment soon will be offered in the Senate, to put an end to filibustering and to require only a majority vote in the House and the Senate in the confirmation of all treaties . . . Dorothy Rosenman, wife of the President's counsel, will write a series of articles for the Woman's Home Companion . . . Representative Albert Gore of Tennessee may waive his right, as a Congressman, to be exempted from the draft . . . Mrs. Anna Rosenberg of the War Manpower Commission, was offered $100,000 by the radio networks for a two-month job as labor adviser. Mrs. Rosenberg, who has more than two months' leave due her, refused the offer.

Senator Lodge, who made the statement about the American lives which would be saved if Russia gave us air bases, had been asked by General Marshall not to discuss those bases . . . Father Hubbard, the Glacier Priest, attended the Army-Notre Dame game wearing the rooting pins of both teams. "I can't help it," Father Hubbard explained. "I'm now doing some lecture work for the Army" . . . Secretary Ickes is not, as yet, appointing a successor to Undersecretary Fortas, who, despite his ailments, became an apprentice seaman in the Navy. Ickes had his own doctors examine Fortas, before the latter joined the service.

Helen Traubel, the Metropolitan Opera soprano now on tour, met General Eisenhower's mother who told her: "You know, my Dwight had a good singing voice when he was young. I didn't let him study music. Maybe it was a mistake. He might've made something out of it" . . . Gypsy Rose Lee, who publicly protested against Mike Todd's bringing her show into New York, was asked what she thought of "The Naked Genius" being a box-office success. "What do I think of it?" said Gypsy, who is collecting big royalties. "Well, you can't take the money and say it" . . . Dore Schary, the producer who converted so many MGM "B" pictures into hit films, has resigned.

Saturday night "Life With Father" celebrated its fifth anniversary. The show has grossed more money than any other show in the history of the theater . . . Before the play was cast, co-authors Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse sent the script to Walter Connolly and invited him to play "Father." Connolly turned it down. "It'll be a big hit," Connolly told his wife, Nedda Harrigan. "But I wouldn't want to be away from Hollywood for such a long time" . . . "If you think it's that good," Nedda suggested, "why don't you buy a piece of the play?" . . . "Oh, no," said Connolly, who then owned six race horses "that's gambling."

The Senate's Committee on Wartime Health and Education—a subcommittee of the Senate's Labor and Education Committee, headed by Senator Pepper—will hold its public hearings in the field. The first stop will be in Pascagoula, Miss., where a check-up will be made on the health and education of the local workers, farmers, etc. . . . Justice Ferdinand Pecora, in discussing the recent Boston outbursts, said: "The social snob amuses me; the intellectual snob bores me; the racial snob enrages me" . . .

Henry Seidel Canby, author of the new Walt Whitman book, is receiving movie bids not only for his book but also for his biography of Thoreau. Canby believes that the Whitman story will make a good movie, but that the Thoreau story won't. Regarding a star playing Thoreau, Canby said: "If they stick to the story, it would ruin the actor. If they change the story it would ruin Thoreau"

IF YOU LIKE EGGS—fried, scrambled, or Easter—this may interest you.

The high price of eggs will soon come tumbling down. This Humpty-Dumpty event will be brought about by the sale of five million cases of Government-held eggs.

War Food Administration, responding to the prodding of critics, admits that it was putting too many eggs in one basket, for military and lend-lease purposes, at the expense of civilian requirements.

Release of this tremendous quantity of eggs won't alarm the housewife, but worries War Food experts because it might discourage production for next year.

Meantime, War Food and OPA are rowing over the price to be paid for these five million cases of cold storage eggs. WFA officials, protecting the producers, want a higher price for cold storage eggs than fresher eggs.

OPA, thinking of the housewife, says: "This is the first time we ever heard that eggs become more valuable as they get older!"

But War Food stands firm on the principle that the old eggs should bring more money. Their reason is that the old eggs were stored by dealers who were playing the usual seasonal game of holding for a rise in price, without realizing that the Government was going to step in and take over at the fixed price.

In other words, War Food experts are trying to hand dealers some of the speculative profit they might have gotten, while OPA—trying to protect the consumer—wants to hold the price down.

The inside Government egg debate is still raging.

Vandenberg-MacArthur

A lot of people in 1940 thought that GOP Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan might be the next Republican candidate for President, but Van himself now has different ideas.

"General MacArthur will accept the Republican nomination if he is drafted," Vandenberg recently told a newsman. "Don't ask me how I know, but I just happen to know. He's not thinking about this now. His main ambition is to recapture the Philippines and to wipe the Japs out of the Pacific. But has it ever occurred to you that he could accomplish this objective much better as Commander in Chief, because he would then be in a position to increase supplies to the Pacific front?"

"Do you think MacArthur could be nominated and elected?" the Senator was asked.

"I not only think it—I know General MacArthur can be the next President of the United States," replied Vandenberg. "However, I don't believe in moving too fast. If his campaign is managed ably, he can sweep the next Republican National Convention like Willkie swept the last one, at the last minute."

Senator Vandenberg denies he has received a letter from MacArthur stating that he would accept the GOP nomination in 1944, though such a communication is reputed to be behind the recent bonanza of MacArthur-for-President clubs in Wisconsin and other States. Chief behind-the-scenes MacArthur promoters are former American Firsters, including Col. Robert McCormick of the Chicago Tribune, Gen. Robert Wood, head of Sears, Roebuck & Co., and Lansing Hoyt, president of the Wisconsin MacArthur-for-President clubs.

Note: Democratic leaders who do not favor F. D. R. for a fourth term are delighted at the current MacArthur boom—for this reason: It gives them an excuse and precedent for the "draft Gen. George Marshall movement." People might have resented a move to run Chief of Staff Marshall as Democratic candidate because of his active participation in the war. But now, with the MacArthur boom going full swing, they can't.

Riders, Colts to Clash at Stadium Tonight

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

(News item—"Bob Odell of Penn is one of the greatest all around players of all time, the greatest player in America today, and in the Army-Penn game his play excelled that of the great Jim Thorpe on the best day Thorpe ever had." The quotation is that of Bert Bell, president of Philadelphia's Maxwell Memorial Football Club.)

Somehow it all sounded like a very extravagant statement, so this department pitched it to Harry Costello, the old Georgetowner and colleague of Thorpe, who was very properly flabbergasted. "'Taint so," said Costello. "Bert Bell saw Thorpe play. He ought to know better."

POVICH

Costello allowed as how he had never seen Odell play, but was willing to concede that the Penn captain was a fine football player and perhaps the best football player in America today. "But that still wouldn't put him in Thorpe's class," he said. "There can't be another football player like the big Indian."

Costello was playing either with, or against, Thorpe for 16 years. He was Georgetown's quarterback when Thorpe was with the Carlisle Indians in 1910. From 1916 to 1926 Costello and Thorpe were either in the same or opposing backfields in the professional era of the Canton Bulldogs and the Massillon Tigers.

"Leave Thorpe out of it for a minute, and list the great ball-carriers of football," said Costello. "Grange, Gipp, Nagurski and Harmon come to mind. They were great. But Thorpe was a better runner than any of the lot.

"Who were your great blockers? Ernie Pinckert and Earl Britton. Well, neither of them could block with Thorpe.

"And your great college kickers, or professional, for that matter. You can start and finish with Sammy Baugh. But Thorpe could outpunt Baugh on any day. I've seen the big Indian stand on his own 10-yard line in practice and kick a dozen punts over the other goal line. Thorpe did everything. He could outperform all of them at their particular specialties."

If Thorpe had a weakness, Costello calls it his over-anxiety to make every tackle while on defense. "The forward pass wasn't a threat in those days. We played a seven-man line with two backers up, with Thorpe playing between the safety man and the backers up. Occasionally he'd get sucked-in and the play would go around him, but that wasn't often. But in that position, with his speed and everything, he was most useful. If they had let him play safety, nobody could have gotten by him."

As for Odell's great afternoon for Penn against Army a couple of week's ago, Costello replies with a resounding "humph." He says you should have seen Thorpe that day at Canton, Ohio, in 1916 when the Massillon Tigers and the Canton Bulldogs were playing for the professional championship.

"We had played Massillon to a scoreless tie the week before and this was the title game. Massillon had the old Notre Dame combination of Gus Dorais and Knute Rockne throwing and catching passes. They didn't complete a pass against us. Thorpe knocked down everything they threw. Stan Cofall, another Notre Damer, was the Massillon fullback. They didn't make a first down.

"We beat Massillon 28-0 that day. Thorpe scored all 28 points, even to kicking the points after touchdown. I was playing safety man for Canton. I might just as well have been on the bench for all the tackles I made. No play came close to me. They couldn't get by Thorpe. He was making their teeth rattle with his tackles."

Thorpe's teams didn't have much use for strategy, Costello relates. "We'd go into a half huddle when we had the ball, but only the backs. The linemen didn't even bother to come back for the huddle. If we needed ten yards on third down, Thorpe would say, 'You gotta give the ball to Jim.' He always talked of himself in the third person. Then he'd run from punt formation and it wouldn't make any difference what kind of interference we gave him."

The big Indian would be amused at the repertoire of 80 or 100 plays which the big-time teams of his day are supposed to learn, says Costello. "We never had more than 15 plays, and they included Thorpe's punting and drop-kicking. Thorpe didn't throw passes until his later years. He knew how to pass, though, but the art of receiving passes hadn't developed to the fine point of modern football. But he never needed the threat of a pass to be the biggest threat in football."

Was Thorpe rough? "Well," says Costello, "who are the roughest football players you've ever seen? Say they were Bronko Nagurski when he was with Minnesota, and Joe Stydahar when he was playing tackle for the Bears. Without aiming to be rough, Thorpe was rougher than either of them. He couldn't help it. All that speed and 195 pounds coming at you. Every time I tackled him in the pro league it felt like my last tackle. It was a heluva way to make a living."

Leo Durocher Going Across To Aid USO

Bears Pass Redskins as Best Gainers

Chicago, Nov. 10 (AP).—It was bound to happen sooner or later—and last weekend it did. The Washington Redskins took a setback in their passing game and the Green Bay Packers suffered likewise in their ground attack. But the Chicago Bears had another field day and for the first time this season emerged supreme as pro football's top offensive team.

Nudged out in one statistic or another by the Packers or Redskins all fall, the Bears today are No. 1 in total offense—rushing and passing—with 384.1 yards a game, first in rushing with 167 yards a game, and foremost in passing with 217.1 yards each contest.

Packers Best Aerialists

Thus for the fourth time since the National Football League's team figures were first compiled in 1932, the Bears are on the way to total domination of the circuit in yardage gained. They did it before in 1932, 1939 and 1941. Last year they were first in total offense and yards rushing, but were nosed out by Green Bay in aerials.

Behind these 1943 Bears' formidable ability to roll up yards and smother opponents, the Packers took two back seats and Washington one. Green Bay is the runnerup in total offense with 335 yards and in rushing with 158.3 yards, while the Redskins tag along back of the Bears with 198 yards a game by passing.

But the reason the championship Washington team is holding the whip in the Eastern Division is its excellent defense. The Redskins are first in total defense and passing defense, limiting foes to 182 yards a game by all methods and to 104.6 yards a contest via aerials, and their rushing defense mark of 77.8 yards for the opposition is second only to Phil-Pitt's amazing 64-yard average.

Redskins Attacks Snarled

Last Sunday Washington was snarled by Phil-Pitt's general all-around good defense and bagged only 62 yards rushing and 147 yards passing. Meanwhile, Green Bay was held by the Bears to 122 yards rushing and 112 passing, while the Bears themselves, although hampered by a muddy field, collected 186 more yards on the ground and 190 on forwards and laterals.

Washington still led in per cent of passes completed with a .523 mark and in average distance of punts with 42.8 yards.

The team leaders:
Total yards gained per game—Chicago Bears, 384.1; Green Bay, 335.4.
Yards rushing per game—Chicago Bears, 167; Green Bay, 158.3.
Yards passing per game—Chicago Bears, 217.1; Washington, 198.4.
Per cent of passes completed—Washington, .523; Chicago Bears, .520.
Opponents' yards gained per game—Washington, 182; Phil-Pitt, 199.8.
Opponents' yards by rushing per game—Phil-Pitt, 64; Washington, 77.8.
Opponents' yards by passing per game—Washington, 104.6; Chicago Bears, 109.3.
Punting average—Washington, 42.8 yards; Detroit, 41.3 yards.

Old Pals Dorias and Bergman Meet Sunday, Reviving Memories of Early Grid Warfare

Lion Mentor Coached Dutch Back in 1919 At Notre Dame

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Fresh from Peru, Ind., and looking the part, Arthur Bergman sat in the stands with a group of prep school students in 1911 and watched a youngster who was to revolutionize football pitching passes for Notre Dame.

Young Bergman's idol at the moment, who later turned out to be his coach, one of his closest friends and his coaching opponent in college football and now pro was Gus Dorais, one of football's biggest names.

Sunday afternoon at Griffith Stadium Dorais' Detroit Lions will meet Bergman's Washington Redskins at Griffith Stadium, some 32 years after their first get-together. Two Notre Dame boys who made good.

Invented Spiral Pass

Since the 1913 Army-Notre Dame game when Dorais and his pass-catching end, Knute Rockne, beat mighty Army for little Notre Dame, Dorais has received credit for inventing the spiral pass, replacing the wobbly end-over-end aerial which was the only forward known at that time.

After graduating from Notre Dame in 1914, Dorais played football with the most famous pro team of the day, Massillon, Ohio, and Gus personally beat Jim Thorpe's Canton Bulldogs, kicking three field goals and tossing a touchdown pass to Rockne.

Before returning to Notre Dame in 1919 where he was backfield coach, instructor to a pair of halfbacks named George Gipp and Dutch Bergman, Dorais coached at Loras College, then Dubuque, and coached and quarterbacked the Camp MacArthur team in World War I, where he earned a commission.

"Gus was rough on us as a coach," Dutch Bergman was saying yesterday. "A real tough guy. but I learned a lot under him in my last year at school and we grew to be great friends."

Bergman and Dorais separated in 1920, Dutch taking over as head coach at New Mexico while Dorais went to Gonzaga University, where he pulled the entire athletic setup out of a hole and before he left in 1924 brought

Gus Dorais, Head Coach of the Detroit Lions

Gonzaga its first conference championship.

In the spring of 1925 Dorais was selected as the new coach at the University of Detroit when the Titans first moved into the big time. Dorais required rebuilding years but from the Notre Dame defeat of 1927 until November, 1929, Detroit was unbeaten and untied.

In 18 years as head coach and athletic director at Detroit, Dorais' teams won 114 games, tied seven and lost 47, although playing teams where material was more plentiful and talented.

When Fred L. Mandel, jr., purchased the Detroit Lions in 1940 he sought out Dorais for head coach. Gus was not interested at the time, however, and in successive years Potsy Clark returned to the Lions as head coach, then Bill Edwards and Bull Karcis took over. Finally Mandel talked Dorais into a contract last year and in the Lions' first game of the season they scored more points than the 1942 team through the entire season.

Dorais and Bergman were coaching rivals while Gus was at Detroit and Bergman at Catholic U. In five games, Detroit won three but Dutch beat one of Detroit's best teams in the last minute of play for one of his most remembered triumphs in 11 years at C. U.

Dorais will bring a clever club, using the Notre Dame box with a man in motion, and also the short punt formation against the Redskins Sunday. Bergman will coach the favored team but whenever he meets a Dorais team Dutch tosses the odds out of the window.

Top Coolidge Team Favored By Record

By Tom Moore McBride

Tonight at 8:30 Roosevelt's Rough Riders will attempt to subdue Coolidge's fractious Colts and the latter will be out to throw the Riders as they have every other local eleven which tried to put a halter to them.

One of the largest crowds ever to witness a local high school series game is expected to throng Griffith Stadium shortly after the gates open at 7 p. m.

Tonight's game isn't the championship play-off, but it might well be, for the two top teams of the District series probably will engage in that one too. Both Colts and Riders have been pointing for this game since it became apparent a couple of weeks ago that they were the outstanding contenders.

Armistice Day Celebration

The event will be more than a mere high school football clash, however, for the program committee composed of representatives from high schools all over the city has arranged an Armistic Day celebration in conjunction with the game. Music will be furnished by a composite cadet corps band under the direction of Franklin J. Jackson of Roosevelt.

Jim Gibbons, WMAL sportscaster who is scheduled to handle the stadium microphone at future Redskin games, will man the ball park public address system for the high school classic.

That the game will be well attended by students goes without saying. Coolidge has sold 1000 student tickets and 400 adult tickets. Roosevelt reported a brisk sale of student tickets and can be expected to draw heavily upon its alumnae for support. Students of schools other than Roosevelt and Coolidge who have seen their teams defeated by the Colts and Riders—except in the case of Wilson—also will be turning out for what they expect to be a great ball game.

Adult tickets for the game are on sale at Roosevelt and Coolidge, at the Touchdown Club and at the ball park. They are priced at 75 cents; for servicemen, 28 cents.

Both Coaches Confident

As both teams wound up practice sessions for the game yesterday Coaches Gil Conn and Artie Boyd of Coolidge and Roosevelt, respectively, were equally sure their teams would make a swell fight of it. Mathematically the Colts have a decided edge. They have lost only one game, that one to George Washington High of Alexandria, 6-0, and Washington-Lee is the only other team which has scored on them. Roosevelt has lost one game in interhigh competition, to Wilson, 12-0, but suffered a decisive 26-0 defeat at the hands of W-L.

Both coaches worked out their squads lightly yesterday, Roosevelt concentrating on signal drill and offense and Coolidge practicing a few kickoffs and passing plays, with some defense on the spread and reverse plays the Riders are expected to throw in the game.

Coolidge will enter the stadium tomorrow at full strength, while Roosevelt has a couple of regulars, Bernie Citrenbaum and Eddy Miffin, on the bench.

As it stacks up now, the game should be Coolidge's by a close one.

Navy in Shape For Columbia Tilt Saturday

Annapolis, Nov. 10 (AP).—Although several of the Midshipmen were suffering with colds today, which resulted in only light scrimmages of Navy's football squad, Capt. John E. Whelchel, head coach, reported his team had rounded into shape for its clash with the Columbia Lions in New York Saturday.

With the kickoff at Baker Field scheduled for 2:30 p. m., the Middies were not anticipating an oversized amount of competition from the Lions.

A comparison of games played by the two teams this season shows that Columbia has scored 33 points against its opponents' 211, while Navy has chalked up 163 to its opponents' 80.

The Lions, to make things more difficult for themselves, have not won a game this season.

Three of Navy's 1943 opponents have played Columbia, however, with Army winning 52 to 0, Pennsylvania emerging victor to the tune of 33 to 0, and Cornell rapping out a 33 to 6 win.

Navy routed Cornell 46 to 7, and last weekend decisively whipped a strong Pennsylvania eleven 24 to 7.

Too, the Columbia game will mark Navy's last appearance on the gridiron before meeting Army at West Point on November 27. Following the Columbia game, the Middies will have a week's rest and an open date.

Probable lineups:

Columbia	Position	Navy
Reed	L.E.	Channell
Capps	L.T.	Whitmire
Kaiser	L.G.	Brown

Pettit	R.G.	Chase

Jim Gatewood, regular halfback from Georgia, definitely will not play. His place will be taken by Charlie Justice, 18-year-old former high school star.

Navy Booters Win Again, 5-1

Annapolis, Nov. 10 (AP).—Seemingly in championship form, Navy's varsity soccer squad ran roughshod over a stubborn but outclassed Swarthmore eleven today, 5-1.

The Navy booters, jumping into a 2-0 lead in the first period through the excellent footwork of Bill Schoeberlein, Johnny Swank and Team Captain Bill Chaires, the Middie team was never stopped.

Swarthmore's lone tally came in the second period when Center Forward Nicholson managed to pierce the Tar defense and slip one past Sam Gorsline, Navy goalie.

Middie Plebe Art Calisto returned to the lineup after a short absence due to sickness and scored two goals—one each in the second and fourth periods.

Sears Sworn Into Navy

Tom Dunnigan, Gonzaga J.V., Seriously Hurt

Tommy Dunnigan, a freshman of the Gonzaga junior varsity team, was critically injured yesterday when he snapped a vertebrae while making a tackle in practice.

The 15-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter A. Dunnigan, 4616 Derressey Parkway, Chevy Chase, Md., was taken to Providence Hospital, where attendants last night said his condition was serious.

As a consequence of the lad's injury, Coach Samuel (Bo) Richards, Gonzaga coach, announced that the game scheduled between Gonzaga and Eastern for 10 a. m. today would be postponed until 2 p. m. Saturday, when it will be played at Eastern Stadium.

Richards said Dunnigan was one of the outstanding men on the jayvee squad and was slated for position at end on the varsity team next year. A rangy 6-footer, he played outstanding football against the Frederick, Md., varsity team, scoring two of the four touchdowns made in defeating the larger team, 24-0.

Coach Richards said Tommy was the outstanding defense man of the jayvees as well as an excellent pass receiver. He is a good tackle but his injury yesterday came when he dived head-on at a man on the opposing squad in the practice session.

Sewell Rejected For Army Service

Camp Blanding, Fla., Nov. 10 (AP). Truett (Rip) Sewell, star pitcher of the Pittsburgh Pirates, today was rejected for military service following a physical examination at the induction center here.

Baugh Leads in New Field—Interceptions

Sammy Baugh is leading one of the National Football League's statistics divisions and it's not passing or kicking. Give up? It's intercepting passes.

Ousted as the league's top punter by Detroit's Harry Hopp due to the league's complicated system of computing the leaders, and second to Bear Sid Luckman all season in passing, principally because Luckman has played in two more games, Baugh was forced out of the lead in his specialty departments.

BAUGH

Slingin' Sam has been playing a fair defensive game in the Redskin backfield this season, however, and plus the fact he has played almost 60 minutes of every game, Baugh has taken over the lead in snatching other guys' passes.

In five games Baugh has intercepted six passes, one more than Green Bay's Don Hutson. Six players are tied with four interceptions apiece. Sammy has returned the six interceptions 74 yards to 68 for Hutson.

In 11 games last year Baugh intercepted only five passes and four the previous year.

Baugh is running into a personal record for having passes intercepted, incidentally, along with playing more than in past seasons. In 1941 Baugh had 19 passes intercepted in 11 games while this year the opposition has snared 10 Baugh passes in five games. The 19 intercepted was Sammy's poorest season in this respect and is the third highest total in league records. Bud Schwenk holds the dubious distinction of having 27 passes intercepted in one season for a record.

St. Alban's Jayvees Beat Little Hoyas, 20-6

With Bob Griffin showing the way with two tallies, including a 75-yard opening kickoff touchdown gallop, St. Alban's junior varsity eleven yesterday defeated Georgetown Prep Jayvees, 20-6 at Garrett Park. Bruce Meader registered the third St. Alban's score. Gripo, G. U. Prep back, stepped 85 yards for the Little Hoyas' only score.

13,000 Brave Coldest Day Of Meeting

By Walter Haight

Pimlico, Md., Nov. 10.—The Miami colors of Mrs. Tilyou Christopher led every inch of the way in the $7500 added Grayson Stakes. Grey Wing, operating in the blue and gold, finished two lengths in advance of Belair Stud's Trierarch with J. B. Baldwin's Harford in third position and an additional 2½ lengths from the winner. A field of five competed in the sixth running of the mile and a half event.

With Jockey Jackie Westrope aboard and carrying the hopes of the favorite players, Grey Wing was clocked in 2:35 3-5, second closest time for the race, and paid a $4 mutuel. The coldest weather of the meeting and a good track was the order for 13,000 customers.

Grey Wing added $6225 to bring his earnings for the year to $22,140 and this was his second victory in eight trips to the post during 1943.

Trierarch Challenges

Grey Wing gave his backers no anxious moments. Westrope rated him along on top. He turned back a mild challenge of Trierarch and then drew out without effort in the closing stages. Harford always was third and the anticipated closing rallies of Corydon and Sweep Swinger failed to materialize.

A thrilling dead heat marked the finish of the second race. Mrs. H. J. Mohr's Silver Pennant and W. L. Brann's Pollyenders hit the wire together and the camera failed to separate them. Three lengths back came H. G. Bedwell's Ally Bal to be third. Silver Pennant, handled by Jockey Johnny Gilbert, set all the pace but was tiring at the end when Pollyenders, ridden by Jockey Charlie Givens, came on with a bold rush. The even-steven ending forced returning of the daily double payoffs. Those with the combinations ending in Pollyenders collected $17.20 and those with Silver Pennant as their second horse took down $10.70. Pollyenders paid a straight mutuel of $5.10 while Silver Pennant returned $4.20.

Brown Plumage Wins Fifth

The winning pair were clocked in 1:15 2-5 for the 6 furlongs. In one of the roughest run races of the meeting, G. H. Knapp's Brown Plumage survived a foul claim and won the fifth event, The Rhine maiden purse. Edmar Farm's My Malcha was second, beaten a length and a half with Greentree Stable's Bird Hawk third in the field of seven going 6 furlongs. Brown Plumage, ridden by Jockey Charlie Givens, shut off My Malcha at the three-eighths pole, then carried Bird Hawk, the favorite wide entering the stretch, but the stewards disallowed Apprentice Ray Arduini's foul claim against the winner. Brown Plumage paid $15.80 and was clocked in 1:15 1-5.

What the Bells Say on Christmas Day

THE MAGIC MUSIC OF CHRISTMAS BELLS CHEERS THE WORLD AGAIN

The molten, golden, notes of bells have touched the emotions, minds and souls of mankind since the Middle Ages. Bells have rung to stir imagination, inspire architecture, enrich literature, enliven melody. Bells have given consolation and chanted with the praying. Bells summon warriors and welcome victors.

But the most rapture which bells impel comes from those that carol at Christmas time. They soothe, this year, a war-throbbing world. They renew Faith in the imperishable goodness of civilized human beings.

So, with great awe and reverence, this store which has a deep feeling for true tradition, chooses for its Yuletide theme the symbolism of bells, vibrant with selflessness and cheering generosity.

Yes, Lansburgh's, with a remarkable record of eighty-three Christmases, brings experience and wisdom to help the bewildered, just as the tonic of the bells brings warmth and courage to a patriotic, heroic people.

We know you will appreciate the urgency of such an early Christmas message. Your co-operation is a necessity, these problem-filled days!

If you will plan to S-P-R-E-A-D your selection of gifts instead of shopping in one hectic splurge . . . if you will begin NOW . . . if you will solve many of your gift problems with War Bonds and Stamps . . . you will help everyone to cherish a custom which makes life full and beautiful . . . CHRISTMAS! Then, what lovely songs the bells will sing in your own heart.

We earnestly invite you to thrill to the story of bells in our windows. How important each one is from the home-coming bell of the locomotive to the dinner bell on Christmas Day! Walk under bells through our wide, hospitable Street Floor aisles. Bells, bells, everywhere! They foretell great cheer for America's beloved Christmas—yea, even in 1943—and ever after!

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Automatic Promotion Act Due for Changes

Definite plans are under way to bring about changes in the Federal employe wage structure. The one proposal that will have Administration support and which will affect all white-collar employes calls for sweeping changes in the Ramspeck-Mead automatic promotion act which governs in-grade promotions. This act has been under fire as too restrictive almost from the time it was signed by the President. Critics say the measure, though a big step in the right direction, was meant for peacetime conditions when Federal employment is static and promotions are few and far between. In wartime, changes in status are made by the hundreds of thousands. Among the changes the Administration will seek in the act are:

KLUTTZ

That employes who have "excellent" efficiency ratings will be given an in-grade promotion every 12 months; those who have "very good" ratings must wait 18 months before they can get an administrative increase, and employes with "good" ratings be required to wait two years to get a similar increase. This proposal is designed to make the efficiency ratings mean something by giving the employes something to work for—an excellent rating. The plan would be applied to all employes, regardless of salary. Under the present system, employes paid less than $3200 are given an in-grade increase after 18 months if they have good or better efficiency ratings, but employes paid over $3200 must wait for 2½ years for a step-up. In-grade promotions, as in the present law, would be knocked out when employes get a grade change.

Another change in the law would permit employes who get "good" ratings to reach the tops of their grades. Now they can't be promoted past the middle of their grades. For example, Grade 5 ranges in salary from $2000 to $2600 and $2300 is the middle of the grade. If your efficiency rating is "good" you can't be given an in-grade promotion, but under the new Administration plan the employe could be advanced to $2400 after a two-year wait. An employe who gets a "fair" rating must be demoted, while an "unsatisfactory" rating results in dismissal.

The Administration also will attempt to clarify the meritorious service provision. Agencies have the authority to give meritorious promotions but it's little-used for the simple reason that what little use has been made of it hasn't been uniform and Congress leaped on several of the unjust promotions with both feet. Now the agencies are afraid to use the authority. They much prefer to use the far more expensive system of giving employes grade raises for outstanding work. Anyhow, the Administration will propose that each agency be given a fund—not to exceed one per cent of the appropriations made for salaries—to be used to make additional in-grade promotions. One per cent would provide a nice sum for each agency.

Bill May Be Changed

It hasn't been decided how and when the amendments will be presented to Congress. Moreover, the new bill isn't in final form and it may be drastically changed before it's formally introduced. However, the changes in principle have been approved by top Federal officials and they have been discussed by personnel directors. The personnel people have been asked to make recommendations on any changes they believe should be made. Many persons would like to see the plan presented immediately to Congress as they believe—with good reason—that action would be delayed for months if it were brought up after the New Year.

A splendid case could be made for the bill if the personnel directors were frank and honest with members of Congress. The present system simply doesn't work . . . it doesn't control promotions and it isn't geared to meet wartime conditions. The thought of working 18 months nowadays for a $5-a-month raise isn't very alluring. You may type twice as many letters or file three times as fast as the others, but your salary is the same in Government. You can't be rewarded with a $10-a-month boost . . . you must wait the same length of time to get your pay raised. So, you soon start to think, what's the use, and you soon lose your incentive. It all works out to place a premium in Government on mediocrity.

But in tens of thousands of cases the boss will wangle you a grade raise, and those raises are much more expensive to the taxpayers than the in-grade kind. Yes, the grade raises can be hidden. . . . Congress never asks about those and with all the changes being made nowadays the grade raises can be easily justified. I've been told repeatedly by Government officials that they have been compelled to hand out raises to keep employes who could have been satisfied with a $5 or $10 monthly raise. Yes, the in-grade promotion act is restrictive but it's far better than nothing, and furthermore, every time Congress leaves a loophole in a law of this kind it's abused by some puffed-up bureaucrat and the entire Federal service suffers as a result.

Rules of U. S. Cars Flouted, Says Senator

By Anne Hagner

"Flagrant violations" of laws prohibiting unofficial use of Government automobiles were cited yesterday by Chairman Murdock of a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee in a hearing on Senator Byrd's proposed bill establishing a Federal car pool.

The Senator from Utah told Witness S. B. Tulloss, chief investigator for the General Accounting Office, that one had only to ride through Rock Creek Park "at the hour when most of us go to work" to see Government-owned limousines and Government-paid chauffeurs driving officials to their offices.

"I should think that the very purpose of a General Accounting Office is not only to audit books and accounts, but also to investigate anything that you believe is a violation of the law," Senator Murdock declared.

"Yes, Senator," said Tulloss, "but there are so many instances in which millions of Government dollars are at stake that it is a question of either assigning men to follow automobiles—or to put them at work on some larger task."

"Rather Flagrant"

"I realize that," the chairman observed, "but it seems to me that violations in the District, virtually right under our noses, are rather flagrant."

"I feel that enforcement of the law prohibiting private use of Federal cars is up to the various heads of the departments," said Tulloss.

"That is true of every dollar appropriated, but the purpose of the GAO is to provide a check for Congress on the money spent by these agencies," declared Murdock.

Tulloss explained that there is a "certain delicacy" about questioning the movements of officials and both Murdock and Senator Revercomb (Republican) of West Virginia joined in a declaration that "certainly no official is too high-ranking to be beyond the pale of the law."

"That's true," Tulloss agreed. "No Government official ever has been too important to be investigated by the GAO."

Wants Investigation

"But when all of these Federal limousines are so easily visible every morning driving through Rock Creek Park it is not a question of delicacy," said Murdock.

Tulloss granted that checks on the use of Government cars showed "some violations" and that GAO received promises that illegal use would be halted. "In some cases," he added, "it was not stopped. But there is some doubt in my hind that the provisions of Senator Byrd's bill, which provides that violators would be summarily dismissed from office, are not too strong. If the head of an agency were found to be guilty, I don't believe the Attorney General would prosecute or that the President would remove him from office."

"You mean the Attorney General wouldn't enforce the law?" demanded Revercomb.

"Thats my candid opinion," Tulloss replied.

Other witnesses were Ernest Hall, Federal Works Administration executive officer, who told the committee that his office hoped to have the FWA-operated Capital Garage placed on a paying basis by the end of the fiscal year; and Wallace Brewster, head of the Office of Price Administration Government mileage conservation office, who declared that the Byrd bill would strengthen that program.

Sends Blessing

Pope Greets Catholic U.'s New Rector

A message from Pope Pius XII to Msgr. Patrick J. McCormick, new rector of Catholic University, was released by school authorities yesterday. It said:

"The Holy Father on the auspicious occasion of your taking formal position of the rectorship of Catholic University desires to extend his personal good wishes for the successful direction and advancement of the lofty mission fulfilled by the university in Catholic intellectual life in America, especially in diffusing knowledge of Papal teaching in Christian Social Order.

"As earnest of paternal solicitude, His Holiness imparts to the rector, all of the faculty of the university, students and friends, apostolic blessing."

The message was signed by Cardinal Maglione.

School Site Not Dangerous, Stimson Finds

The Patterson Elementary School will remain where it is at Nichols ave. and Chesapeake st. sw., since, in the opinion of Secretary of War Stimson, its proximity to planes taking off from Bolling Field is not so dangerous as to warrant removal.

The decision concerning the school was disclosed in a message to Representative Jennings Randolph, House District Committee chairman, who had written the Secretary last month following complaints from parents of Patterson's students.

In addition, the message said, "the War Department has no land available for a new school site . . . and the presence of the present temporary structure can be tolerated without positive danger to flying."

No permanent school building, however, may be constructed on this site, the letter to the Congressman pointed out, since any building "greater in height would constitute a definite hazard."

Meanwhile, District Engineer Commissioner C. W. Kutz yesterday indicated that no further improvements to the school playground would be made because of lack of funds and continuing negotiations to secure a new site for a larger, permanent building.

The Fort Grable playground, immediately adjoining the school property, has been graded and is available to the pupils, Mr. Kutz said. Since no permanent building can be put on the present site, all further efforts will be made to build one elsewhere as soon as possible to accommodate the overflow of students, he pointed out.

Citizens' Group Elects

A slate of new officers has been elected by the Kalorama Citizens Association, headed by Maj. Davis B. Wills of the Capital Transit Co. as president, and including George W. Hodgkins, first vice president; Frederick A Thuee, second vice president; Mrs. H. W. Wiley, secretary, and Mrs. Edna Johnston, treasurer. Fletcher S. Tilton and Hodgkins were designated as delegates to the Federation of Citizens Associations.

The association approved the bill to register bicycles but suggested that the maximum penalty for violations be lowered from $300 to $50.

7 More Bitten By Dogs In District

Seven more persons were bitten by dogs in Washington yesterday, including four children, as Health Department tests found another dog to be rabid. This brought the total of rabid animals discovered in the District since spring to 82.

Enforcing the Commissioners' dog-muzzling order, police reported that one dog owner posted $5 collateral after her pet had bitten Mrs. Janie Poler, Negro, of 4632 Hayes st. ne. The owner was identified by police as Josephine Lindo, 4625 Hayes st. ne.

The following four children were reported bitten yesterday, all released into home care after hospital treatment:

Robert Beall, 11, 3404 Dent pl. nw.; Phillis Morgan, 11, 354 11th st. se.; Richard Truslow, 10, 1207 Trinidad ave. ne., and Barbara Tolbert, 6, of Chevy Chase Parkway.

Also bitten by dogs, according to police, were Mrs. Mildred Stewart, 2825 Knox Terrace se., and Miss Hazel L. Long, Negro, 23, 526 Columbia rd.

The owner of the rabid dog that died Tuesday night was said to have handled the dog while having a fresh cut on his hand, and is considered exposed and therefore "bitten" in Health Department records. This is the second exposure of this type reported in two days.

$15,750 for Gallinger in Funds

President Roosevelt yesterday transmitted to Congress a Budget Bureau appropriation estimate for the District that included $15,750 for Gallinger Municipal Hospital for the fiscal year of 1944.

The entire supplemental estimate totaled $153,519, of which $125,000 was allotted to "refund of erroneous collections;" $5961 for an additional amount for personal services in the Municipal Court, including pay of retired judges, and $4808 for the expenses of the water department's distribution system," and $2000 for refunding water rent erroneously paid.

The appropriation for the hospital came after Commissioner Guy Mason recommended its approval as a result of a Senate District subcommittee investigation of alleged insanitary conditions there. Cited as a major requirement by Mason as the appointment of an assistant superintendent, which the Budget Bureau also named specifically at a salary of $6000 yearly.

The President's communication said: "The details of these estimates, the necessity therefor, and the reasons for their transmission at this time are set forth in the letter of the director of the Bureau of the Budget, transmitted herewith, in whose comments and observations thereon I concur."

OPA Accuses Six Laundries, Cleaning Firms

The long-promised crackdown on Washington's laundry and dry cleaning prices was brought to bear yesterday when the Office of Price Administration filed injunction suits charging price ceiling violations by six concerns here. John L. Laskey, chief attorney for the District OPA, said he would seek five more injunctions tomorrow.

Two of the suits also ask that the defendants be compelled to disclose information as to alleged excess prices charged by wholesale laundry plants. Laskey said previously that retailers here were reluctant to give out this information in fear of reprisals by their wholesalers.

Those sued were:

Harry B. King, of the Century Cleaners, 5200 Wisconsin ave. nw.; Morris Hollander, of Hollander's, 3232 Wisconsin ave. nw.; Julius Rappaport, of the Aristo Cleaners, 111 Kennedy st. nw.; Samuel Tash, of the Chevy Chase Valet Shop, 4447 Connecticut ave. nw.; Opal Korkolis and Gus Korgolis, of the Good Hope Cleaners, 1501 Good Hope rd. se.; Abraham, Philip, Frank and Harold Bleicher, of the City Dry Cleaners, 5423 Georgia ave. nw.

12 Students, Nonresidents, Dismissed

Twelve children of nonresident families have been dismissed from District public schools within the past month for failure to pay tuition costs imposed on certain categories of nonresident students, it was disclosed yesterday by officials of the Board of Education.

The dismissals came to light when one of the parents complained that she had been forced to pay eight weeks' tuition costs of $37 for her son, a student at McKinley High School, because her husband, a Federal employe, was the boy's stepfather.

Under District laws free education is granted to children of natural parents who, although nonresident, work for the Government here. The law, however, does not extend the same privilege to adopted children or stepchildren living in the homes of nonresident Federal employes, according to Richmond B. Keech, District corporation counsel.

"Higher Academic Rating"

Mrs. Paul Schneller of 4707 Amherst rd., College Park, Md., wife of an employe of the Government Printing Office, reported she had been forced to pay tuition because her son was by a previous marriage.

Mrs. Schneller said the family had moved from Washington to Maryland when they were unable to find suitable accommodations here. She added that her main reason for wanting to keep her son in District schools was "their higher academic rating over Maryland schools."

Keech said the question was annually debated when budgets were discussed with the House and Senate appropriation committees. He added that the legislators had always refused to change the wording of the law.

Names Not Disclosed

School officials refused to divulge the names of the children who had been dismissed from school and they were unable yesterday to give the exact number of students who are paying tuition.

Tuition costs are based on administrative costs divided by the number of students.

Traffic Kills Woman; 3d Victim in 3 Days

D. C. traffic deaths this year 73
Deaths this date last year 91
District total last year 108

Miss Betty J. Gordon, 37, of 5128 2d st. nw., was fatally injured yesterday when struck by a Capital Transit Co. bus at Kansas ave. and Gallatin st. nw., marking the city's third traffic fatality in three days. She died at Garfield Hospital shortly before noon a few house after the accident.

Police said Lawrence Miller, 29, of 4228 Rainier ave., Mount Rainier, Md., was driver of the bus and had six years' experience. Miss Gordon was an employe of the GAO and came here about a year ago from Richmond, Va.

The condition of Mrs. Lucy A. Carter, Negro, 77, of 1438 Swann st. nw., remained critical. She was admitted to Freedmen's Hospital Tuesday night after being struck in the 1800 block of 14th st. nw. by an automobile operated by William K. Suddith, 20, of 1415 Chapin st. nw.

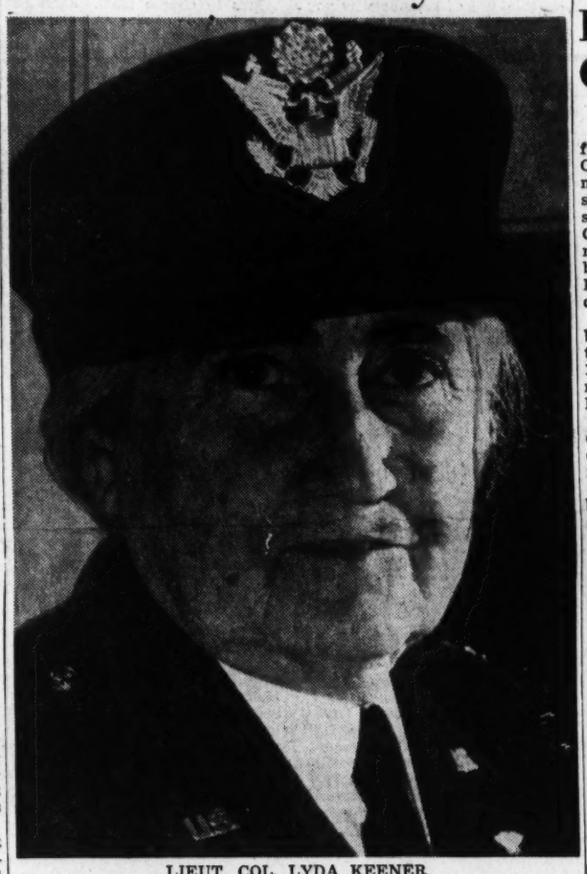
Naomi Labrie, 42, of 634 North Carolina ave. se. was admitted to Gallinger Hospital with possible head injuries after she was struck at South Carolina ave. and D sts. se. by an automobile operated, police said, by Marshall A. Wright, 31, of 2818 12th st. ne.

A coroner's jury ordered Leonard Williams, 27, of 1024 Wisconsin ave. nw., held for the grand jury under the Negligent Homicide Act. Williams was the operator of a taxicab which struck John Ethier, 60, of 1615 Corcoran st. nw., Tuesday. Mr. Ethier died the same day at Emergency Hospital.

Kirkland Lites, 36, Negro, of 2149 N st. nw., was exonerated of blame in the death of Everett L. Owens, 42, of 2003 53d ave., Bradbury Heights, Md., by a coroner's jury. Owens died July 28 at Casualty Hospital of second and third degree burns and shock received when a hook and ladder fire engine which he was driving collided with a trailer truck, operated by Lites, at 6th and E sts. nw. The accident resulted in sirens being replaced on emergency vehicles only two days later.

After sitting through 4½ hours of testimony given by 23 witnesses, the jury returned a verdict of accidental death. Lites testified in his own defense but merely repeated a statement he had made to the Accident Investigation Unit shortly after the accident.

Col. Keener to Quit Tomorrow After 37 Years as Army Nurse



LIEUT. COL. LYDA KEENER

Lieut. Col. Lyda Keener, principal chief nurse at Walter Reed, will retire tomorrow after completing the longest period of service in the history of the Army Nurse Corps.

Entering the Army in June, 1906, when the strength of the Nurse Corps was increased from 100 to 125, she has seen the corps grow in personnel to more than 30,000.

Her tours of duty have taken her all over the United States, to Pacific bases, to the Orient and she was with the Army of Occupation in Germany after the Armistice. Her only regret with more than 37 years of service is that she was not sent earlier.

"We missed a great experience," she believes. "The nurses now overseas are working hard, sometimes under extremely trying conditions; but they will be able to remember that they shared the hardships of the fighting men and stood side by side with them in the moments of greatest trial."

The Army Nurses Corps provides the finest career in the world, of that she has no doubt. She has found in it the opportunity to serve her country and fellow men, to make friends and to see the world.

"The satisfaction in caring for the sick and wounded, in aiding the recovery of mind as well as body, is given only to nurses. And there are other advantages. I have friends all over the world. I have swum in the waters of the Pacific and bought curios in China. While stationed in Germany, I used my leave to visit England, Scotland, France, Switzerland and Italy. In 1943 there are more interesting jobs available to women than there were in 1906, but even today no career offers more opportunity."

Born in Greensburg, Pa., she was graduated from the McKeesport General Hospital in 1905 and entered the Army the following year. She has been stationed at Walter Reed since last June. A niece, Miss Mary G. Lohr, was among the American nurses who survived the battle of Bataan and escaped from Corregidor to Australia.

Bund Leader

FRITZ KUHN

Kuhn Testifies Before Special Grand Jury

By Joseph Paull

Fritz Kuhn, 48-year-old convict-fuehrer of the one-time powerful German-American Bund, spent most of yesterday testifying on sedition in this country before a special grand jury in District Court. Kuhn is the Goering-ish rabble-rouser who used to shout blatantly at bund meetings that he had nothing to fear from American justice.

Although he lacked his medal-bedecked gaudy uniform, the rotund Kuhn has changed little since 1941 when he was sent to Dannemora Penitentiary for forgery and larceny of the funds of his bund.

His English has improved, he demonstrated as he sat in the hall of the court shouting and arguing in his gutteral accented voice. Occasionally, he would rise and stomp back and forth.

Wants Wife's Fare Paid

"The next time I am called down here, I want my wife to have her fare paid, too," he protested to Joseph Burns, a special assistant to the Attorney General.

Burns merely shrugged. He patted Kuhn on the back and walked away.

Kuhn laughed vigorously, then called Burns back to argue about his testimony.

Kuhn lost his citizenship in March, when a Federal judge found the American fuehrer had fraudulently sworn allegiance to this country. He was released from prison in June and taken to an internment camp for dangerous enemy aliens at Crystal City, Tex.

Ever a clown, Kuhn shouted so loud at times that bits of his testimony could almost be heard in the hallwway. He wasn't handcuffed but two United States marshals were along to guard him.

Kuhn wore the same thick rimless glasses, a tweed topcoat, baggy pants and a light gray hat. He chain-smoked cigarettes whenever the grand jury recessed.

In Session 3 Weeks

The grand jury has been in secret sessions for three weeks. It was called after part of an indictment of a previous grand jury was found faulty. That and a third grand jury found that 33 persons, including several now in jail for un-American activities, had conspired to undermine the morale of the armed forces.

Among those under indictment are William Dudley Pelley, Ralph V. Townsend, Elizabeth Dilling and George Sylvester Viereck.

Kuhn once said he would be the dictator of America and was awaiting Der Tag. But at sundown yesterday, he was escorted by the marshals put in a car and quietly driven away. He did not protest.

Poker Club's Profits $600 Weekly, Court Hears

A poker club here with more than $600 net profits a week was described yesterday at the District Court trial of Thomas N. Nickles, 55, and Louis T. Chopoff, 49.

The books of the "United Nations Social Club" at 1132 18th st. nw., were examined by Assistant United States Attorney Peter T. Ansberry, to refute the testimony that the club, which the defense claims was strictly private and by card only, was not a nonprofit organization.

Policeman R. V. Gray and B. D. Clark testified they went to the club in April and engaged in a $2 limit game with occasional $4 "roodles" hands. They said 75 persons played at the place, where there were 20 tables in full swing. The take of the house on the games was 5 per cent of the winnings, and Ansberry estimated the profits were between $20 and $25 an hour. Games were held twice weekly, it was said.

Gray, who claimed he lost but $2 in the evening, only because he drew an inside straight late in the game, expressed indignation at the sandwiches sold at the club. He said he paid 40 cents for a sandwich 4 inches thick with bread and 1/16 inch thick with salami.

The club was patronized mainly by hotel employes, testimony indicated, together with two Congressmen's secretaries whose names were not mentioned. It was in operation from September 1942 to May 1943.

Previously three employes of the club had been found guilty of selling liquors there without a license.

Veterans Ask Plan of Postwar Aid

A rehabilitation program which, if put into operation, would affect every man, woman and child in the United States and the resources of the Nation was approved yesterday by the National Council of American Veteran Organizations at its closing session at the Veterans' Administration Building. The membership of the 15 veteran bodies composing the organization is estimated at a quarter of a million.

Among the proposals in the postwar program bearing directly upon conditions caused by the war were: The demand for maintenance of adequate material plants; provision for one year's military or naval training for every male citizen before he reaches his twenty-fifth year; a Court of International Justice to adjust differences between nations; free access by any nation to needed materials; elimination of unnecessary trade barriers, and an agency for collective action against any aggressor nation.

Reemployment Suggestions

Other suggestions included: pensions of $60 a month, supplemented by dependency allowances, to be paid in all unemployable war veterans without regard to service connection of their disabilities; a three-month furlough with pay before final discharge, and the opportunity, both while in service and after discharge, for the completion of educational courses or for suitable vocational training.

Touching reemployment the program advocates insurance of jobs for the veterans by effective perferences to all governmental positions for which they are qualified; reemployment in their old jobs and preferred placement in all new positions for which qualified.

In broadening the base of the rehabilitation structure the Council of Veterans profited by the experience of some of the older bodies which read lessons from World War I. In this connection it is noted that the organization is composed of reputable and recognized veteran bodies in almost all parts of the country.

Disasters which followed World War I are reflected in recommendations calculated to prevent recurrence. Provision is urged for special loans for the purchase of farms or their imbprovement and for stock, equipment and other essentials to agrarian development. Private business would profit by similar loans and the insufferable burden of mortgages and debts would be lightened by the same means.

Tax Free Bonds Assailed

Touching the financial phase of the proposal it was suggested a "pay-as-we-go" policy should be adopted by the Government with no more income tax evasion available through Government bonds and imposts to be based primarrily on ability to pay. Realization of the menace of inflation is shown by the demand that wages and living costs be kept in balance and the hazard lessened to the small income group or those relying on investments, savings or insurance benefits.

It was recommended that encouragement of free enterprise be provided by the prohibition of monopolistic and unfair trade practices. Payment of canceled war material contracts should be made at once on the basis of a formula set up before the war's end.

If private enterprise fails to absorb employables it was urged that they should be taken care of by publicaly financed needed improvements of all kinds. This emergency should be provided for by advance planning by all Federal agencies, States, counties, cities and private agencies.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Woman Impulsively Offers to Share Home With Brother's Wife and Child When He Goes to War; They Accept; and Now She's Aghast at Prospect

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have got myself on an uncomfortable spot,—all because I leaped before I looked. Even if you denounce me as being a woman without compassion, perhaps the effect will be salutary. Here is the problem: In a moment of generosity, when my brother was inducted into the Army, I rashly agreed to shelter his wife and small child in my four-room apartment, although there are at least two other members of the family who would have been no more discommoded than I. Now my rental agent says, "No, no"; and although he is undoubtedly wrong in telling me I can't, still, one does not relish the prospect of skirmishes with the rental agent at every round of the clock.

Moreover, I have two sons of my own; and my neighbors' patience had already been sorely tried while they were going through the wailing phase. And they are not happy at the prospect of having a third child added to an already too-noisy household. Besides which, my nephew is a peevish, wakeful child who tears, spills, drops and breaks until I have been ready for a padded cell on the few past occasions when I was obliged to suffer him. He is so poorly adjusted to family life that his mother doesn't dare use the bathroom after he is in bed, for fear the noise will waken him. This could and should have been corrected, of course; but his mother has very positive ideas, and responds to most suggestions with the query, "He's healthy, ain't he?"

The total responsibility for maintaining domestic equilibrium falls on me, since my husband has gone to war, too. The whole set-up leaves me feeling defeated and helpless. Incidentally, my sister-in-law has a job; and with her salary, plus the increased family allowance, she is not financially beholden to anyone. A further complication,—of which there are too many already,—lies in the fact that she is very young and requires policing; and my brother is most happy that I promised to take her in, because of that very angle. Is there anything I can do? Or is it a case where I've made my bed and must lie in it?

None But a Fool Persists in Error

DEAR S. J. D.: From what you say, I judge the double-up arrangement has not yet become an accomplished fact; and that the hideously dismaying aspects of that setup, from your viewpoint, are tormenting you at this point only in "second thought." If so, the bed has not yet been made; which automatically absolves you of necessity to lie upon it. And even if the impulsively proposed arrangement were already in operation, and driving you inexorably to the verge of distraction,—a commonsense grasp of "the fitness of things," which prompts the sane individual to serve first things first, in sore emergency and bitter dilemma, should fire you with the clarity and courage to rescind your offer and compel a full restoration of your lodgings to your exclusive use. As Cicero said: "Any man may make a mistake; none but a fool will persist in it."

UNQUESTIONABLY your offer was a mistake; and your brother showed thoughtless extreme selfishness in taking immediate advantage of it. The arrangement proposed is untenable, in 99 cases out of 100. And as for his eager relief at the prospect of having you assume responsibility for policing his wife in his absence,—a consideration that causes you to feel acutely conscience-bound to penalize yourself by taking her in,—that angle is, in my opinion, the one angle above all angles to the situation which establishes positive, impersonal reason (i. e., justification without reference to your creature convenience), why you should NOT be drawn into his family affairs. Definitely it is not in your province to police her, either at long or close range. Her actions do not come within the sphere of your moral or social jurisdiction. Thus, any gratuitous attempt on your part to supervise her behavior would be dangerous presumption,— giving her just cause for outrage; and putting you in line for merited rebuke.

THE FACT that your sister-in-law is adequately bulwarked financially for the duration, having a salaried income to supplement her family allowance, and thus without necessity to depend upon in-law support; plus the fact that you are a "duration widow," too, obliged to shoulder the psychically heavy burden of total responsibility for the welfare of your two young children and yourself, in your husband's absence, constitutes still another aspect of the situation,—a "case" complete in itself,—which automatically absolves you of special accountability for her comfort and/or security in the circumstances.

Quickly and Firmly Withdraw the Offer

SO, TO YOUR question,—"Is there anything I can do?"—the answer is: Yes. You can, and by all means should, call off this mistake before it goes further and gets worse. Take yourself off the spot with maximum grace by saying firmly, boldly and simply,—with the air of one whose mind is made up,—that you know on sober second thought the plan just wouldn't work, and that you are withdrawing the offer in haste, with apologies. Tell them the "won't do" conclusion began to develop the minute the real estate agent registered protest; and has grown by leaps and bounds since then, until now your own conscience will not let you go through with it. If your brother and sister-in-law get furious, so be it. There is never any pleasing selfish people. If they show a reasonable, understanding attitude,—as they should,—you can then prove the sincerity of your good will toward them by helping the wife work out another, independent set of plans.

POST DISCOVERIES—

We Preview the Fighting French Bazaar

Do you want to give a Christmas present that's original, that's made by hand, that's lovely, and unbelievably inexpensive too? Well, your best bet is the Fighting French Bazaar that opens this afternoon at 3 and continues through Saturday.

One of the most attractive features of the opening is a raffle with 10 lovely gifts to be given away, among which are a large hand-painted screen and a hand crocheted bedspread.

Here's your chance to not only give something unusual for Christmas, but it's also especially nice when you know that the proceeds go to the Fighting French.

Sketched are a few samples of their exquisite handwork. They're worth seeing.

It's almost too easy to be patriotic when you can carry your own in a shopping bag like this one. It comes in the Fighting French colors, bright red, white and blue with the Lorraine cross on the front. Made of sturdy cotton. $2.50.

Snoods are a big fashion and these beautifully hand crocheted ones with detachable ribbons on the side are a work of art. You'll be thinking of reasons why you should give yourself a Christmas present, so you can have one too. $3.00.

A gift for a lucky baby is a handmade quilt covered with beautiful butterflies. There are several other designs to choose from. Each one is made of nice materials and as finely stitched as anything you used to find in little French shops. $5.00.

Rarely do you find an apron that doesn't add pounds to your figure. There's something about the way that this one is cut that really whittles down the waistline and the nicely cut flare of the skirt is becoming to your figure. This one doesn't shy away from the kitchen and is pretty enough to keep on when company comes. It's made of soft denim, and has two large pockets in front. Wonderful shades of blue and brown. $3.00 and $4.50.

A bottle of famous French dressing—the real thing—would be an ideal gift for any friend who's proud of her culinary ability. 75c a pint.

We saw a handmade writing case of tie silk and lined in satin. Just to look at something so exquisitely made was a pleasure. There are several pockets for paper, envelopes, etc. Hours and hours of careful labor went into its making and it costs you just $5.00.

There are many other things that we'd like to give honorable mention to—a combination hanger-case with compartments for hankies, umbrella, etc.; handstitched ration book holders of tie silk; a shelf of wonderful looking jams.

We could go on and on—but it's more fun if you see them for yourself.

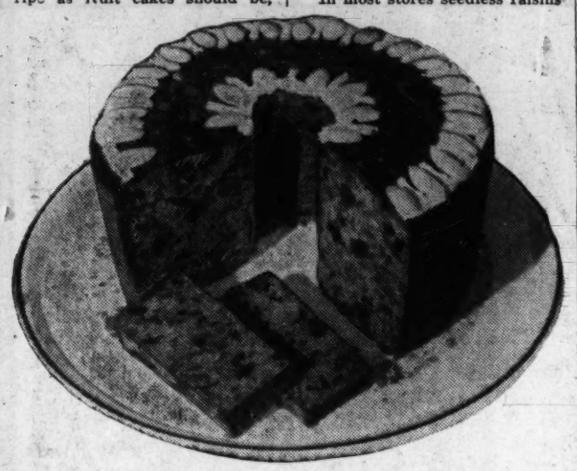
Fruit Cake Not Costly If Recipe Adjustments Are Made

This year a piece of fruit cake and best wishes may be one way of saying "Merry Christmas." If you don't believe it is a year to go "all out" in gift exchange, then be ready with a slice of flavorsome fruit cake to serve with a glass of wine, tea or coffee and so convey to friends the spirit of the season.

Martha Ellyn

You don't want to wait until the first snowflake lights on your nose before you get to your cake-baking. To be rich and ripe as fruit cakes should be, they must be given weeks to ripen.



The cost of some of the ingredients used for fruit cake has risen. But there are precious few food items that have not changed in price the past two years. However, you can make adjustments and substitutions in the ingredients and so keep the cost from being prohibitive.

Miss Mary Turner, Home Service Director, Potomac Electric Power Co., reports that she has held the price of the fruit cakes baked in her kitchens, this year, to the same level as that of the last six years. She reports that the dark fruit cake she bakes costs 31 cents per pound, while the light one costs 32 cents per pound.

We are all making adjustments in life, so why not make adjustments in the baking of fruit cake? If you do not have butter, then use vegetable shortening. Margarine is one alternate. The cooking oils too, may be used with success. In fact, one famous cook says that when she makes her fruit cakes with cooking oils they have a "lovely glow."

Domestic sherry may be used instead of brandy. And the California sherrys now on the market are really splendid ones. If you think that the price of nuts runs the cost of the cake too high, then use more fruit. Just use your noggin in making substitutions. You had best record the changes you make so that you will know just how you achieved a fine product.

One store which is doing a land-office business on candied fruits and nuts for fruit cakes, reports it has sold more than 7000 pounds of the candied fruits in two months. That would prove that fruit cake is still a favorite food for the holiday season.

In most stores seedless raisins are the only kind available—the seeded ones passed out of the picture some time ago.

Given today are recipes for Plantation Fruit Cake (dark); Light Fruit Cake, and the President's Fruit Cake.

The Plantation Fruit Cake, can be made for 31c per pound, if domestic sherry is used instead of brandy, if vegetable shortening is used as an alternate for butter, and not so many nuts are used. This is the recipe for this cake:

PLANTATION FRUIT CAKE

Cream 1 cup of butter or margarine in a large bowl until the consistency of heavy mayonnaise. Add 1 cup sugar, gradually, beating until light and fluffy. Add 4 eggs, one at a time, beating after the addition of each egg. Add ½ cup black molasses and ½ cup strawberry preserves or jelly. Sift together 1½ teaspoons cinnamon, 1 teaspoon allspice, ½ teaspoon cloves, ½ teaspoon mace, ½ teaspoon nutmeg, ½ teaspoon ginger, 2 cups flour and ¼ teaspoon soda and sprinkle over 1 package raisins, 1 package currants, 1 package sliced pitted dates, ¼ pound chopped citron, ⅛ pound chopped orange peel, ⅛ pound chopped lemon peel, ⅛ pound chopped cherries, ½ cup blanched almonds cut in strips and ½ cup chopped walnuts. Mix well. Add alternately to creamed shortening mixture with ¼ cup strong coffee and 1/3 cup brandy or grape wine. Bake in a well greased tube pan from 4 to 5 hours at 300 degrees, in preheated oven. Makes approximately 6 pounds.

If you prefer the light fruit cake, then the following method which is the recipe of an Eastern Shore woman who has an enviable reputation as a cook, will show you the way.

LIGHT FRUIT CAKE

Cream ¾ cup butter or margarine in a large bowl until the consistency of heavy mayonnaise. Add ¾ cup sugar gradually, beating until light and fluffy. Add 3 eggs one at a time, beating after the addition of each egg. Add ¼ cup honey. Sift together 2 cups flour, ½ teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon baking powder and sprinkle over ¼ pound chopped figs, 1 pound Sultana raisins, ¼ pound chopped orange peel, ¼ pound chopped candied pineapple, ¼ pound chopped lemon peel, ¼ pound chopped candied cherries, ¼ pound chopped citron, ¼ pound shredded cocoanut, ¼ pound chopped Brazil nuts and ⅛ pound chopped crystallized ginger. Add alternately to creamed mixture with ¼ cup sherry wine and ¼ cup orange juice. Bake in a greased tube pan from 3 to 4 hours at 300 degrees Fahrenheit. Makes approximately 5 pounds.

Mr. Herringer, formerly the capable chef of the Shoreham Hotel, created a delicious fruit cake for which the recipe follows. The fat used is vegetable oil, you will find this recipe produces a splendid cake of the dark variety.

PRESIDENT'S FRUIT CAKE

Combine 1½ cups brown sugar (well packed) with 4 well beaten egg yolks. Beat vigorously for 2 minutes. Sift 2 cups flour with 1 teaspoon baking powder, 4 teaspoons salt, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, 2 teaspoons allspice, 1 teaspoon ground cloves. Combine 1 cup flour with 1 cup (¾-pound) shaved citron, 1½ cups (1-pound) chopped figs, 1 cup raisins, 1 pound chopped nuts, 1 cup (½ pound) chopped candied pineapple, and ¼ pound each of lemon peel and orange peel. Add the sifted dry ingredients to the egg yolks alternately with 1 cup of fruit juice and beat until smooth. Add the fruits and nuts, and 1 cup vegetable oil and mix well. Fold in 4 stiffly beaten egg whites. Turn into a loaf pan lined with oiled paper. Bake in very slow oven 275 degrees for 4 hours. Makes 6 pounds.

Mrs. Alexander D. Surles Fetes Group of Service Wives

By Elizabeth Henney

"I never worry about the men, they see each other every day at the office, but if the women of the department weren't gotten together now and then, we'd never know each other at all," said Mrs. Alexander D. Surles yesterday afternoon to one of the guests at her tea. Wife of Major General Surles, Chief of the Public Relations Department of the United States Army, Mrs. Surles has pitched into the job of trying to make the wives of the officers in that department feel somewhat at home in wartime Washington.

And judging by the relaxed and happily friendly atmosphere that pervaded yesterday's event, her job has been (to use Army parlance) "well done." In fact, so well, that none of the guests wanted to go home, when the party hour was officially over and many of them just stayed on, completely enjoying themselves, getting thoroughly acquainted with each other, and making arrangements for further get-togethers at an early date.

As Mrs. Surles explained to a small group—in the public relations department, particularly since the war started, the personnel has been recruited from all over the country. Their wives have cheerfully torn up roots in the home town and come along to make a home here for "papa." And "papa" is so busy at the office after he gets here, that getting adjusted simply takes care of itself. But it's sometimes not so easy for "the little woman," who knowing no one, with no especial way of making contacts, finds herself pretty much high and dry.

One of the guests remarked that if every chief's wife went about her job of making the department personnel feel "at home," as Mrs. Surles does, there wouldn't be a lonely service wife in the city.

Mrs. Henry L. Stimson, wife of the Secretary of War, was in the receiving line with Mrs. Surles, as was Mrs. Emily Newell Blair, head of the women's interests division of the War Department; while noted assisting at the tea table were Mrs. Ernest Dupuy and Mrs. Stanley Grogan.

Mrs. Jacob L. Devers, whose husband, Lieutenant General Devers, is now overseas, was among the early arrivals and reports that her daughter, Mrs. Alexander Graham, wife of Colonel Graham, is now with her husband in Brownwood, Tex., and that her two young cousins, Capt. Stanley Dinwiddie and Lieut. Comdr. Alva Dinwiddie, are both seeing active service, but are so far all right.

Mrs. Robert P. Patterson, wife of the Undersecretary of War, was one of the early arrivals, as were Mrs. Palmer Hoyt, Mrs. John O. Herrick and Col. Oveta Culp Hobby.

Mrs. John Waters, whose husband, Captain Waters, was captured during the North African campaign, stopped by and reports that she expects her mother, Mrs. George S. Patton, jr. (wife of Lieutenant General Patton), to come to town soon for a brief visit with her.

Mrs. R. Dunlop, Jr., Back From Visit

Mrs. Robert H. Dunlop, jr., has returned to her home at 3851 Newark st. from a week's visit with her parents. Col. and Mrs. William Mechling Calvin, at their home, Old Orchard, Belle Haven Park in Greenwich, Conn. Her husband, Captain Dunlop, joined her for the weekend.

Mrs. Dunlop is the former Lucette Calvin, whose marriage to Captain Dunlop took place in Greenwich early in May. Captain Dunlop is the son of Gen. and Mrs. Robert H. Dunlop of Washington.

New Chief of French Military Mission Has Colorful Background of Service on Many Fighting Fronts

TRADITIONALLY a city in which nothing is so constant as change, Washington has long been accustomed to welcoming newcomers with one hand while waving goodby to their predecessors with the other.

Just now a military notable who is centering the spotlight at farewell fetes—such as the one given yesterday afternoon at the Mayflower—is Gen. Marie Emile Bethouart, retiring chief of the French Military Mission, who is scheduled to leave soon for North Africa. Already here is his successor, Lieut. Gen. Paul Etienne Beynet, whose appointment becomes effective today.

Congratulations were in order at yesterday's party, incidentally, for General Bethouart. He has just been promoted to lieutenant general.

Having heard that General Beynet arrived in this country by plane only last week and that this was his first trip to America, I had hardly met him the other afternoon before I was asking him the obvious—"And what do you think of this country?"

His eyes twinkled. "I don't think—much. I mean," he added quickly and diplomatically, "I haven't had long enough to think about it at all. Just a few days in New York and here—but of course, I do like what I have seen." And then, he launched into high praise of some of the beauties of Washington, particularly the broad streets and lovely trees, and gave more than a broad hint that he thought he would like the place even better after he was settled.

GEN. PAUL ETTIENNE BEYNET

THE PERSONABLE general had no sooner set foot in Washington than he found out, firsthand, that stories he had heard about housing problems here were not exaggerated. But having lived in a number of wartime centers the past few years, he is not one to be overly bothered about that. Sooner or later, he is sure, he will find the kind of house he wants in Washington.

There's more than an even chance, however, that no matter where General Beynet hangs his gold-braided hat in Washington, he will spend a sizable part of his spare time at the Library of Congress. In even a casual conversation with him—and, by the way, he speaks English fluently, so you won't need an interpreter—you are likely to find out that he is a bibliophile; one of the most scholarly military men we have had around these parts in quite a while.

His wife is still in Algiers. One of his daughters is married to an officer on the staff of General Catroux; the other is a nurse in the French air forces and is stationed at Meknes, Morocco.

General Beynet's military career has been accented with a variety of important posts and high-placed appointmnets on the fighting fronts. Like most men who have concerned themselves with action for their country rather than publicity for themselves, he is modest about his accomplishments . . . but the record speaks for itself.

HERE ARE A FEW highlights: When war broke out in 1939, General Beynet headed a division stationed in the Mareth Line (Tunisia). Later he assumed command of the 14th Army Corps, which held the Italians in the Alps and the Germans on the Rhone River until the armistice. In July, 1940, he became chief of the Nineteenth Army Corps in Algiers, and in February, 1941, he was made a lieutenant general.

In 1941, he was appointed president of the French Military Delegation to the German Armistice Commission at Wiesbaden, but he resigned from that a few months later and escaped to London, where he joined the French National Committee and became Commissioner of War. From there he returned to North Africa, where he spent several months before coming to this country.

A graduate of St. Cyr—the French West Point—he has served as commander of the Fifty-third Battalion of Chasseurs (Blue Devils); served with the French Army in Hungary and also on the Rhine after the First World War; was transferred to the Middle East in 1925, where he later became Chief of Staff. In 1936, as a brigadier general, he was named military governor of Briancon, and in 1938 received command of the Algiers Division in North Africa.

Accompanying General Beynet to Washington were Maj. Jean Bienvenu, who is married to an American—the daughter of a former U. S. Senator; and Capt. Cherif Ismail, whose title "cherif," in case you know your Tunisian history, indicates that he is a descendant of a prophet. The latter's wife and 9-year-old son are in Algiers. Mme. Bienvenu, who has been living in Atlanta for some time, is expected to come to Washington soon.

Ambassador and Senora De Escalante Entertain for Costa Rican Journalists

By Peggy Preston

Officials and diplomatic Washington turned out yesterday afternoon to greet yet another group of Latin-American "Gentlemen of the Press."

The occasion was the reception at the Embassy of Costa Rica, when the Ambasasdor and Senora de Escalante entertained in honor of three distinguished journalists from their homeland. The honor guests, all of whom are old friends of the Ambassador, were Joaquin Vargas Coto, editorial writer for La Tribuna, Ruben Hernandez of La Presa Libre, and Avelardo Bonilla, of Diara de Costa Rica.

All of the honorees were in great good humor yesterday as they greeted the more than 175 guests who crowded the drawing rooms at the new Costa Rican Embassy on S st. These men, the eighth and last of the groups of Latin-American newsmen to visit here officially, were enthusiastic in their applause of all things North American . . . and they were saying so at every turn.

Said Thomas T. Driver of the Inter-American Affairs Office, who accompanied them on their country-wide tour:

"They're real newspapermen. On the trains their typewriters made a veritable symphony of sound. They sent back reams of copy to their home papers."

Chatting amicably with all newcomers was Senor Bonilla, political writer for Diaro de Costa Rica. "We invented an English language all our own on this trip," he said to a group of listeners. "We were told that good English is bad Spanish, or vice versa, so we sprinkled the two. The result was not bad. At least most people managed to understand us."

Seen testing Senor Bonilla's new version of Latin-American English was Mrs. Edward Stettinius, wife of the Undersecretary of State, who appeared early in the afternoon to smilingly wave her way through the throng.

Members of the Diplomatic Corps who stopped by during the course of the afternoon were the Peruvian Ambassador, Don Manuel de Freyre y Santander, the Ambassador of Chile and Senora de Michels, the Ambassador of Nicaragua and Senora De Sevilla Sacasa, the Ambassador of Panama and Senora de Jimenez, the Ambassador of Bolivia and Senora de Guachalla, and the Minister Counselor of the Embassy of the Dominican Republic and Senora de Vega Batlle.

Among others glimpsed here and there in the rooms were the Undersecretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Paul Appleby, Mr. and Mrs. James Souby, Senora Munilla, wife of the Military Attache at the Cuban Embassy, Dr. Leo S. Rowe, director of the Pan American Union, and scores of officials from the Office of Inter-American Affairs, the State Department and Latin-American Missions in Washington.

More than 175 guests filed through the drawing rooms during the late afternoon hours. They paused first at the entrance, where the Ambassador and Senora de Escalante presented the visiting newsmen and continued into the dining room where the tables were laden with elaborate buffets.

Present at the reception were journalistic representatives from three other Caribbean countries who accompanied the Costa Rican group to Washington early this week. Included were Jose Ramon Estella and Herman Ornes Coiscou of the Dominican Republic, Miguel Pino, Jose Quetglas and Napoleon Viera Altamirano of El Salvador, and from Nicaragua, Pedro Joaquin Chamorro and Dr. Andres Larga Espada.

The group of newsmen are in Washington after a cross-country tour during which they took a first-hand look at the North American war effort. Their visit to the United States is being made at the invitation of the National Press Club, under the auspices of the Office of Inter-American Affairs.

Since their arrival from the Caribbean area on October 3, they have journeyed to practically every large defense center in the country. Last week they spent in New York, and after a brief stop at Philadelphia they arrived in Washington on Monday for the final lap of their trip. On Friday they will leave for home.

Their week here is an eventful one. Tuesday saw them the guests of honor at a luncheon given by members of the National Press Club and later in the afternoon they were received at a small reception, at the home of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs and Mrs. Nelson Rockefeller. Yesterday they toured Capitol Hill, calling upon Vice President Wallace and later stopping at the Pan American Union.

Purely Personal

The Venezuelan Ambassador, Dr. Diogenes Escalante, entertained at luncheon on Monday at the embassy in honor of H. Gil Fortoul, director general of the Department of Foreign Affairs of Venezuela, and a delegate to the United Nations Conference on Relief and Rehabilitation.

The United States Ambassador to Peru, R. Henry Norweb, is at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, where he has recently been joined by Mrs. Norweb.

Representative and Mrs. John E. Rankin will have as their guests this weekend Mrs. Nash Reid and her daughter, Miss Caroline Milnes Reid. They will arrive from Jacksonville for the wedding of Miss Annie Laura Rankin and Dr. Arthur Lankford, jr., which is to take place Tuesday. The marriage will take place at the home of Representative and Mrs. Rankin.

The Naval Attache of the Mexican Embassy and Senora de Garcia Jurado will give a late afternoon party Saturday at the Statler for a group of naval aviation officers from their native land.

Lieut. Comdr. Mildred H. McAfee will return to her office today after a visit to her alma mater, Vassar College, where she spoke on Tuesday on her first visit to the campus since she was commissioned to command the WAVES.

Mrs. Veronica Howard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Gillin, has left Washington to join her husband, Ensign Ralph A. Howard, U. S. Navy, in California. Mrs. Howard resigned her position with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, where she has been employed for four years. Ensign Howard, who has served with the U. S. Navy for nine years, has just returned from combat duty in the South Pacific, where he has been stationed since June.

National Woman's Party to Honor Early Feminist

By Genevieve Reynolds

To commemorate the 128th anniversary of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, author of the Women's Declaration of Independence, the National Woman's Party will sponsor special ceremonies tomorrow at 3 o'clock in the Crypt Room of the Capitol.

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

Mrs. Arthur Charles Watkins, president of the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs, will lead 40 organizations of the federation in paying tribute to the indomitable-willed Quaker woman who in 1848 called the first woman's rights convention in the world. In addition, the 24 national women's organizations united in the Women's Joint Legislative Committee for Equal Rights have arranged a special program.

Representative Mary T. Norton of New Jersey, chairman of the Committee on Labor, heads a group of prominent women speakers, which includes Mrs. Stanton's granddaughter, Nora Stanton Barney of Connecticut, chairman advisory committee, National Woman's Party, and Katherine Devereus Blake of New York. Incidentally, Mrs. Blake was a close friend of Mrs. Stanton. Music will be provided by the United States Marine Band and a chorus of 34 voices from the Elliott Junior High School. Mrs. Marie Moore Forrest is directing the entire program. Presiding over the ceremonies will be Mrs. Emma Guffrey Miller, Democratic National Committeewoman of Pennsylvania.

Commenting on the celebration, Alice Paul, chaiman of the National Woman's Party, remarked: "Observing the birthday of Elizabeth Cady Stanton at this time is especially appropriate, for the Equal Rights Amendment still is pending in Congress.

"Mrs. Stanton's plea and demand," she continued, "was take down every barrier in woman's way and let her find her own sphere. The Equal Rights Amendment is the effort of American women today to remove the last legal barrier to the full rights of American women under the democratic principles which this Government has announced it proposed to extend to all the world."

History records that Elizabeth Cady Stanton, born November 18, 1815, in Johnstown, N. Y., was the first to demand publicly suffrage for women. She was the first president of the National Woman's Suffrage Association. She resigned at the age of 77 after two years in office.

"Lifting woman into her proper sphere," said Mrs. Stanton, "is the mightiest revolution the world has ever known." She started that revolution with the First Woman's Rights Convention and her demand for suffrage.

Department of Confusion

Intoxicated with a vision of the brave new world to come,—a postwar world where workers will know "the joy of work,"—we floated back to our desk Tuesday afternoon, following the luncheon at which Henry J. Kaiser was speaker, to whip out our story of what we had heard, to meet the club column's 3 p. m. deadline. And in our excitement of the moment, we wrote that Mr. Kaiser had spoken to members and guests of the Woman's National Democratic Club. Actually, he spoke before the Woman's National Press Club, following a brilliant introduction by President May Craig,—who was born in South Carolina, who has written for Maine papers for 20 years, and who is decidedly nonpartisan in politics!

DAR Unit Meets Tomorrow

The Susan Riviere Hetzel Chapter, DAR, will meet tomorrow at the home of Mrs. Charles L. Johnson, 5510 Centre st., Chevy Chase, Md. Mrs. Watson has written many stories of animals but prefers the dog, trained for battle, which, in this instance is Guadal Canal. Many Buddy Bags are being made and filled by chapter members, to be sent by the National Defense Committee of the District to sailors and Navy gun crews on merchant marine ships at Christmas.

Bank Earnings At 10-Year Peak

For the first time in history, Federal Reserve Member Banks are making more money from securities holdings than from loans.

The Federal Reserve Board, reporting this yesterday in its monthly bulletin, also said the banks during the first half of 1943 showed larger earnings and net profits, despite higher expenses, than in any similar period since the 1933 bank holiday.

With more than 42 billion dollars in Government securities—virtually double their holdings a year earlier—the banks reported interest and dividends on all securities for the first six months of the year amounted to 352 million dollars, compared with 248 million dollars in the same period of 1942. This despite a decline from 1.8 to 1.5 per cent in the annual rate of return.

Loan volume during the same period fell more than two billion dollars to $15,445,000,000 to yield 275 million dollars in earnings, compared with 329 million dollars in the corresponding period a year ago. The rate of return fell one-tenth of a point to 3.6 per cent.

Total earnings of the member banks amounted to 783 million dollars, the board said, compared with 726 million dollars in the first half of 1942.

Expenses aggregated 540 million dollars and 520 million dollars respectively, and net profits 246 million dollars and 170 million dollars.

Member bank holdings of other than Government securities declined 422 million dollars from the first half of 1942 to $5,491,000,000 this year.

Western Union Net Off

New York, Nov. 10 (AP).—Western Union Telegraph Co. today reported net earnings for the nine months ended September 30 of $5,291,214, equal to $5.06 per share, compared with $6,519,815, or $6.23 in the corresponding 1942 period.

Furniture Sales Off 17 Per Cent

The Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported yesterday that furniture sales of five large Washington stores decreased 17 per cent in September, and were off 15 per cent in the first nine months this year, as compared with like 1942 periods.

The Fifth Reserve District as a whole showed a drop of 6 per cent in furniture sales in September, and a similar percentage decline in the first nine months.

Syndicate to Handle Chicago Transit Bonds

New York, Nov. 10 (AP).—A banking syndicate composed of more than 100 firms has been formed to bid on Chicago revenue bonds to be issued if and when proposals to unify the city's transit system under public ownership are finally approved, it was disclosed in banking quarters today.

Harris Hall & Co., the first Boston Corp. and Blyth & Co. are leaders of the group preparing to take an active interest in the financing if it comes to the market. The amount of the financing has not yet been determined, but banking circles expect it to run into high figures.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Nov. 10 (AP).—With the market closed tomorrow, Armistice Day, grains fluctuated within narrow limits today as the good and bad news about balanced one another. At one time wheat was up as much as ¾ cent, but a subsequent sell-off erased all of the gain.

Rye was easier most of the session on fairly large selling by a leading commission house. Oats and barley merely marked time. At the close wheat was ⅛ lower to ⅛ higher, December, 1.57⅛; May, 1.56⅛@1.56½; rye was unchanged to ⅜ lower; December, 1.11⅜@1.11⅝; oats were ⅛ lower to ⅛ higher and barley is unchanged to ¼ higher.

Riley, Counsel To FCC Probe Group, Resigns

Hugh Riley, assistant counsel of the House committee investigating the Federal Communications Commission, has resigned his committee post effective November 1, The Post learned last night.

Riley's resignation, to return to private law practice, was the first major break in the staff of Committee Counsel Eugene L. Garey since Representative Eugene E. Cox (Democrat) of Georgia resigned as committee chairman.

Cox stepped down as chairman and member of the committee September 30 following repeated charges by FCC members of "bias," but Garey, similarly criticized for alleged "star chamber" conduct of the FCC inquiry, is still counsel of the reorganized committee.

Representative Clarence F. Lea (Democrat) of California, who revamped committee procedures after succeeding Cox as chairman, confirmed Riley's resignation but said he knew of no reason for it other than Riley's desire to return to the private practice of law in New York. Riley was in charge of the Albany (N. Y.) Fraud Bureau before joining the committee staff and had not figured prominently in the committee tilts with the commission.

Lea said his job probably will not be filled, and that the committee has not considered displacing Garey. In another quarter it was learned that Garey is now preparing for the committee a synopsis of his findings to date. One member, who asked not to be quoted, said there will be no determination of Garey's future role until this task is completed. He said Garey "may not wish to remain with the committee."

First committee hearing under Lea's leadership will be held next week when three witnesses who testified in last summer's New York short-wave hearings will be reheard. The witnesses will be called back under the committee's new rule that at least one member be present when testimony is taken. The old Cox committee had heard several witnesses with only Garey present.

Later the committee will call back T. A. M. Craven, minority member of the FCC, to complete his testimony before calling other members of the commission.

D.C. War Housing Visited by Burton On Seventh Tour

Senator Burton (Republican) of Ohio, chairman of a Senate District Subcommittee investigating Washington housing conditions, yesterday made the seventh in a series of tours, this one concentrated on some of the 3796 war housing units constructed by the National Capital Housing Authority.

Conducted by NCHA Executive Officer John Ihlder, the trip provided the Senator with his first look at war housing. On the itinerary were two permanent defense housing projects, the first at Condon Terrace and Atlantic st. se., and the other at Alabama ave. and Hartford st. se.

Ihlder revealed that the next project by his agency, comprising 740 dwelling units for Negro war workers, will be of permanent construction instead of the demountable or demolishable variety constructed as a result of the War Production Board's two-year ban on permanent public housing.

Dope Peddler Convicted of 10 Violations

Frank Posey, 34, Negro, was convicted yesterday of 10 violations of Federal narcotics laws after a three-day trial before Justice David A. Pine.

The jury deliberated more than three hours before bringing in the verdicts. Prosecutor was John L. Ingoldsby, assistant U. S. attorney.

LeRoy Morrison, agent-in-charge of the Washington field office, Federal Bureau of Narcotics, said Posey was one of the largest peddlers of narcotics to be caught here in several years.

Narcotics agents testified Posey sold more than 6000 grains of heroin to informers. The drug was adulterated with from 92 to 98 per cent sugar milk. Also seized were two automobiles said to have been used in deliveries of the drugs.

Previously three of Poseys' hirelings had been convicted of narcotics violations.

Posey claimed to be a farmer, but Morrison cited records showing a criminal record for a prohibition violation in 1930, and several narcotics violations between that time and 1939.

ROBES FOR THE FAMILY . . . MOM . . DAD . . SIS . . BROTHER

In this winter of fuel-rationed living, warmth is a family affair! When the 7 a. m. alarm shatters the frosty silence of the Old Homestead and the indoor thermometer registers a meager 60-odd—what happens? . . . It's "Robes On!"—from Dad down to Butch! The Sire makes a dive for his blanket-warm all-wool . . . Mom snuggles into her quilted cosy . . . Sis sprints for her toasty chenille . . . and young Butch makes that flying leap from bedroom-to-bath completely robe-wrapped! And at night, the performance is repeated—only then the scene is the homey hearth with everyone cosily be-robed—a picture of family warmth. Yes!—this winter—it's robes first because it's warmth first—and for warm robes for the whole family—in Washington—it's The Hecht Co. first!
